

IMPACT

CULTURAL, BIOLOGICAL AND POLITICAL ANALYSIS – ALTERNATIVE VIEWPOINTS

PRELUDE TO THE STORM

OLIVER Cromwell was one of the first to employ organised mob rule. Paid agitators were used as a weapon in England to bring down King Charles I, whom Cromwell executed in 1649.

These same methods were used in later coups and revolts like the French Revolution, and the Russian Revolution.

The Revolution in Spain in the 1930s nearly succeeded, but for the intervention of the Army under General Franco. An excerpt from a book written about it, gives us an insight into the methods used:

“... DESTROYING by social disorder from within weakened the central authority. It was a policy to unchain popular anarchy until it rolled like a raging avalanche. It was secretly funded. The governments that followed each other in quick succession were weak and corrupt. Assassination, warfare between rival workers’ gangs [were the order of the day].” [Excerpt from Foss and Gerahyt’s book Spanish Arena, describing the run-up to the 3-year civil war in Spain (1936-1939)]

This is precisely what has been happening in South Africa, and even as far back as the Anglo-Boer War.

Another example is Ukraine today. 20th century experiences loom large in Ukrainian memory especially the 72 years of the Soviet Union, including Stalin’s genocidal famine (the Holodomor of 1932-1933) that was visited not only on Ukraine but also the northern Caucasus and the lower Volga River area; also the purges of 1937-1938. More recent events – that is, the Orange Revolution of 2004 and the weakness of the Yanukovich regime up to last year – made the country ripe for the picking for predators in waiting.

Ukraine was from November last year rocked by the largest street protests since the Orange Revolution of 2004.

But there is more to the protests than simply discontent ...

LOOKING AT THE UKRAINIAN CRISIS

FINDING one’s way through the maze of ethnic, cultural, historical, political and economic complexities that comprise today’s Ukraine is a Herculean task. The first question, however, is: Why should South Africa or any other country far from the madding crowd want or need to understand the situation there?

The answer is that not only was a world war brewing – quiescent for now, but bubbling under the surface – but that more than any other Revolution, it gives us a look at the matrix used by global interests intent on destroying any opponent with the potential to ruin their plans for world domination. The massive interest shown in the rapidly-moving scene there, the players, the moves on the geopolitical chess-board, prove this point.

Putting together this dossier has meant using articles and material from several sources, some of which overlap with each other, making the timeline difficult to follow. We have therefore put together a sort of mosaic of items, each with its own gems of information and insight, trusting in the reader to form a composite picture of this important subject . . .

IN THIS ISSUE

- 1 The Ukraine Crisis
- 3 SA Current Affairs
- 6 Far & Wide – Demography & Sovereignty
- 8-16 Ukraine Crisis (continued)
- 17 Revisionism
- 18 The Christmas Truce
- 19 Readers Forum
- 20 Soaring Eagles, New book, Quotes

THIS time, we can do no better than use the inspiring words of Olaf Childress, editor of The First Freedom in the USA:

THAT we enjoy rather than dodge life's challenges, that we prefer the products of our own hard work above hand-outs, wish kindred souls for neighbours, and find self-government the best – makes us a separate, but not [necessarily] all-around superior people.

... We are what we are, nothing more nor less. Many members of other races migrate here to sponge off us, not the other way around. So, while our people shun trophies proclaiming superiority, no one can deny that the reputation of this life-loving breed remains enduringly attractive throughout the world.

Self-government's revival among white nations which have overthrown their Marxist mediocracies and again cultivate apartheid [separateness] realities will by example prove instructive to every educated person on earth. Those who cannot survive the planet keeping its optimal balance must perish, nothing new here. History's sudden shifts – just when some bankster thinks he's ready to rule the world – prove as much. God is not mocked ... A Bronfman who can't rule his own appetites lends sufficient proof that such Chosenites are nowhere near subduing the rest of us. Leave them their Samson Option if they must . . .

UKRAINE CRISIS

WASHINGTON POLICY A HOLD-OVER FROM THE COLD WAR

THIS article by renowned analyst PAUL CRAIG ROBERTS was published in the early part of the recent Ukrainian revolution. His prediction of possible Washington strategies came true, but these were checkmated by Putin . . .

IN a number of my articles I have explained that the Soviet Union served as a constraint on US power. The Soviet collapse unleashed the 'neo-conservative' drive for US world hegemony.

To neutralize Russia, Washington broke the Reagan-Gorbachev agreements and expanded NATO into former constituent parts of the Soviet Empire, and now intends to bring former constituent parts of Russia herself – Georgia and Ukraine – into NATO.

Washington withdrew from the treaty that banned anti-ballistic missiles and has established anti-ballistic missile bases on Russia's frontier. Washington changed its nuclear war doctrine to permit a nuclear First-Strike. All of this is aimed at degrading Russia's deterrent, thereby reducing the ability of Russia to resist Washington's will.

'Human rights' gambit

The Russian government and also the government of Ukraine foolishly permitted large numbers of US-funded NGOs to operate as Washington's agents under cover of 'human rights organisations', 'building democracy', etc.

The Western media's attacks on the Sochi Olympics were part of the ridiculing and demonizing of Putin and Russia. Washington is determined that Putin and Russia will not be permitted any appearance of success in any area, whether diplomacy, sport or human rights.

The American media are, de facto, a Ministry of Propaganda for the government and the corporations helping Washington to paint Russia in bad colours. Stephen F Cohen accurately describes US media coverage of Russia as a "tsunami of shameful, unprofessional, and politically inflammatory articles."

As a holdover from the Cold War, these US media retain the image of a free press that can be trusted. In truth, there is no free [mainstream] press in America except for internet sites. During the Clinton regime's later years, the US government permitted five large conglomerates to concentrate the varied, dispersed and somewhat independent media.

The value of these large mega-companies depends on their federal broadcast licenses. Therefore, the media dare not go against the government on any important issue. In addition, the media conglomerates are no longer run by journalists but by corporate advertising executives and former government officials, with an eye not on facts but on advertising revenues and access to government 'sources'.

Contd from page 1

Washington is using the media to set up the American people for confrontation with Russia and to influence Russians and other peoples in the world against Putin. Washington would love to see a weaker or more pliable Russian leader than Putin.

Predictions of Russian strategists

Many Russians are 'asleep at the switch', but the Izborsk Club [Strategist Club] is trying to wake them up. In an article (Feb 12) in the Russian weekly Zavtra, strategic and military experts warned that the Western use of protests to overturn the decision of the Ukraine government not to join the European Union had produced a situation in which a coup was a possibility. Such a coup would result in a fratricidal war in Ukraine and constitute a serious "strategic threat to the Russian Federation". The experts concluded that should such a coup succeed, the consequences for Russia would be:

- Loss of Sevastopol as the base of the Russian Federation's Black Sea Fleet;
- Purges of Russians in eastern and southern Ukraine, producing a flood of refugees;
- Loss of manufacturing capacities in Kiev, Dnepropetrovsk, Kharkov, where contract work is done for the Russian military;
- Suppression of the Russian-speaking population by forcible Ukrainianization;
- The establishment of US and NATO bases in Ukraine, including in Crimea; and the establishment of training centres for terrorists for deployment in the Caucasus, the Volga Basin and perhaps Siberia.

Contd on page 8

S.A. CURRENT AFFAIRS

General Election on May 7th

MANY skeletons are coming out of the closet as the election draws nearer. Helen Zille of the Democratic Alliance admitted in a recent interview that she had been an ardent supporter of the ANC in the 1980s. Like many dyed-in-the-wool liberals, she seems to have believed that the only difference SA would experience in having a black ANC government was that they were ... black. Now, however, she complains that "the ANC has become a patronage-driven party".

DA officials in some districts have been threatened and told that they may not come into the black townships. Six DA councillors defected to the ANC (possibly because of death threats).

The DA and Julius Malema's EFF are both lodging fraud charges in court against Jacob Zuma for his use of public funds to upgrade non-essential parts of his home at Nkandla, and Zille is pushing for him to be indicted in Parliament. It is ironic that Malema, who is waiting for his own trial for corruption and racketeering to begin, should be one of those to lay charges against Zuma. Revenge would be sweet for him.

Other Parties

WHILE trying to play down the backlash against his promise to nationalise mines, banks and retail chain-stores, Julius Malema of the EFF party has said there will be land expropriation. There will be 'justice', not reconciliation. The people will be given water, electricity and sanitation. Where is the money to come from for country-wide benefits if the Rand collapses and the whites are no longer able to pay their taxes?

THE main policy of the Freedom Front will be land matters.

THE ACDF, a well-established party, wants to conserve Christian principles. Corruption, they say, is a poison. The Hawks anti-corruption unit should be replaced by the more effective Scorpions, which had been disbanded.

Land Hunger?

SO hungry are blacks for land, that of the 77,847 blacks offered land 'in restitution', only 5,865 accepted the land. 71,982 took the cash instead! At the Lonmin Platinum Mine, where the Marikana drama played itself out, hundreds of sturdy houses were built over the years for mine workers. But many of those who got houses, either rented out rooms, or rented the entire house and went to live in the shackland nearby!

Violent protests

IT has been estimated that 32 violent protests take place every day in SA. The vote, they say, is not enough. They want services and land.

At Marikana hearing

REVEALED at the Commission of Enquiry into Marikana was that striking miners sang "Kill the NUM" to the tune of "Kill the farmer, kill the Boer". NUM, National Union of Mineworkers, is in competition with AMCU founded by Julius Malema.

Judge Farlam is currently hearing evidence in camera about the murder of the ten men killed the day before the mob of striking workers at Marikana moved threateningly down from the hillock onto the police who were trying to disperse the crowd. Two policemen, two mine guards and six others (who, presumably, did not want to strike) were hacked to death.

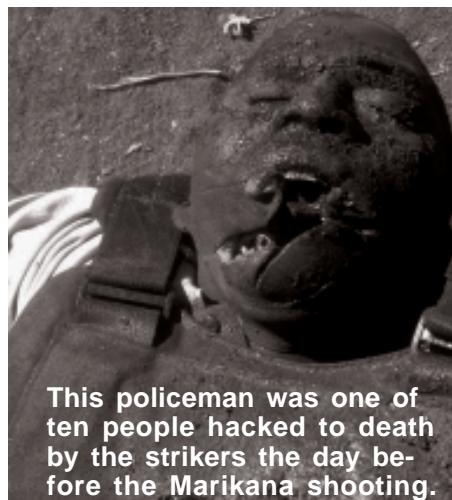

The mob on the hillock, on that same day when the ten were hacked to death, were 'innoculated' by two sangomas with what was called ashes of the burnt bodies of the ten. This, the mob was told, would protect them from the police. (What was probably in the mix of charcoal and dust scratched on their skin was a drug to inflame them.)

Events the day before the Marikana drama were filmed by the camera crew of the SABC and viewers saw the whole thing, including how the mob of striking workers were sharpening their axes, pangas and knives, obviously intent on violence. There might be other evidence that Judge Farlam could hear from the witness, who insisted on testifying in camera, for fear of his life. Up to now little has been heard of the horrifying death of the ten murdered men the day before the police shot at the Marikana miners.

The ANC Youth League

THE ANCYL has a debt of R15-million. Which bank is holding the debt, and where did all the money go?

*The ANCYL members who strewed faeces over the floor of the entrance of the Cape Provincial building and the Cape

This policeman was one of ten people hacked to death by the strikers the day before the Marikana shooting.

Town airport have been expelled from the ANC.

Illegal immigrants

SOME of South Africa's border posts are functioning so poorly that illegal entrants don't even have to crawl through the holes in border fences to enter the country. They simply walk through border gates, unchecked by officials. [Weekend Argus.]

The number of foreigners arriving in SA is steadily increasing, while the numbers leaving are much lower. There are insufficient inspectors to trace those who overstay their welcome. An immigration official said: "We have just over 600 inspectors in the whole of SA. London alone has over 3,000."

Apart from the brisk illegal import and export of such 'products' as weapons, ivory, rhino horn and drugs, it is the number of people coming into SA, displacing locals of their work, that is the most serious problem. This is a major contributing factor to unemployment figures, as well as our economy being sucked dry for social grants (by those illegals who are able to procure 'legal' documents). A recent count shows 120,000 ID books had incorrect numbers.

Murders

THE bimonthly mouthpiece of the HNP, Die Afrikaner (17-31 Jan 2014) carried a tally of the murders, many accompanied by rape and mutilation, perpetrated in the 12 months of 2013. Over two pages, the month, the name and gender of each victim and method of murder are listed. There were 210 murders, most of them farming folk. Because English-speaking and Afrikaner white South Africans have intermarried to a considerable degree, it is not always possible to separate the two groups. However, 57 of the names given of victims are English or of other white extraction.

Leftist fright

THE widow of Alan Paton, author of Cry the Beloved Country was one of the first liberals to realise things were going wrong in SA, and left the country. Since then, there have been dozens here and abroad, who believed that the only difference between people was the colour of their skin, but who have now abandoned their fantasies and questioned the situation here.

Alex Boraine (one of the leading lights of the liberal struggle against apartheid, and a former vice-chairman of the Truth & Reconciliation Committee) has written a book called "SA on the brink of becoming a failed state."

Former SACP stalwart, bomb planter, and ANC MP, Ben Turok, left the Communist Party after a 1974 visit to the USSR, and is disillusioned by events unfolding in South Africa.

Brave Public Protector

ALTHOUGH delivered in a quiet and reasoned manner in mid-March, the report on Nkandla, President Zuma's property in KZN, turned out to be a damning indictment of plunder created by lack of governmental management.

Thuli Madonsela spent 4 hours reading out her 447-page report on Nkandla to the press. Among other matters she explained that her report had taken so long to prepare because in some cases the documentation was refused her, and she and her team spent much time in procuring it.

She found that Zuma did not exercise the necessary control over the construction process, and failed to ensure that state (i.e. public) money was correctly employed. She therefore recommended that Zuma pay back the amount for non-security structures, including a swimming pool and other personal non-security structures claimed by Zuma.*

Madonsela also recommended that measures be taken against ministers and top officials responsible for the unparalleled corrupt spending on the Nkandla project.

Since the report was made public, Madonsela has been subjected to vicious and defamatory attacks on her integrity. As a trained lawyer, she has endured them with dignity.

Two of her greatest supporters are the Freedom Front of Pieter Mulder, who opened a website and twitter account for her; and Loyiso Gola of Late Nite News (TV3) who lampooned Zuma for not knowing what was going on in his own home in Nkandla, and the 'ministers' and architects who gave inflated invoices.

Others who publicly supported her report were Trevor Manuel, former Vice-president Motlantle, Ronny Kasrils and Bantu Holomisa, among others.

* The DA estimates Zuma should pay back R52.8m of the R246 he claimed, plus R16.8m in taxes.

DERBY- LEWIS attacked in prison

CLIVE Derby-Lewis and Janus Walusz, the men who were sentenced for assassinating Communist leader Chris Hani, survived an attack on their lives on 26 February, when an inmate at the prison stabbed them with a dangerous sharpened spoon. Correctional Services Dept. spokesman confirmed the attack.

Derby-Lewis's wife, Gaye, said her husband had lacerations on his arms and head, and that doctors had given him stitches. He had been attacked from behind by a drug-crazed inmate and was unable to defend himself. In April last year, Derby-Lewis, who has terminal cancer, was denied medical parole. His three previous applications for ordinary parole had been approved by the parole board but vetoed by the Minister of Correctional Services. At the age of 78, and having served 15 years, he is eligible for parole in terms of the law.

Press Release

Clive Derby-Lewis and Janus Walusz both suffered severe head wounds. In addition, the inmate tried to stab Derby-Lewis in his face. To defend himself, Derby-Lewis's left arm was so badly damaged that a bone was broken. There were multiple stab wounds, and his arm is now in plaster. Both the Department of Correctional Services and the Kalafong Hospital meted out excellent treatment to both Walus and Derby-Lewis.

The facts of the case are now being investigated by the prison authorities but our comment is this: If the Communist Party and Advocate George Bizos hadn't made it their business to thwart and oppose all of Clive's parole applications, he wouldn't have been in prison now. According to the law, Clive was due for parole in October 2008. He was recommended for parole by DCS's own parole board. He has applied for parole three times and each time Bizos and the Communist Party have come up with some cock and bull reason to oppose the parole, managing to manipulate the system so that Clive's parole was refused.

We are now in the process of taking legal action against the former DCS Minister who stated publicly that she would "never" grant parole to Clive. Clearly politics is the reason why Clive is still in jail at the age of 78. And for someone like Bizos whose clarion cry is 'justice for all', it is something of a travesty that he should be the reason why justice is not for all, particularly with regard to Clive Derby-Lewis.

We await the results of the Department of Correctional Service's findings about the attack. But the key question that should be asked by all who believe in justice is: Why should the SA Communist Party and George Bizos be able to thwart justice to suit their political ends? That is the question for South Africa.

If Clive had been killed in the attack, where would that put the SACP and George Bizos? It is a question they should ask themselves. Does South Africa need a political martyr at this stage of its political history?

Gaye Derby-Lewis

Black Narcissus?

RICHARD STENGEL who collaborated with Nelson Mandela in writing his autobiography, travelled around with him for some time. He gives his impressions of the man and his obsession with his appearance. The following is a summarized excerpt . . .

ALL his life, Mandela was concerned with how he looked, from the colour of his shirt to how straight he stood. He knew that appearances matter.

He loved clothes. If you wanted to play the part, you "had to wear the right costume". "His father was determined that his son would not look like an uncivilised 'native' wearing a blanket".

One of the first things he did when he had achieved some success as a young lawyer, was to find his own tailor. "Mandela had a natural sense of style and in those days was considered something of a dandy. He dressed that way not only because it gave him pleasure, but because whites judged blacks in part by what they wore. He did not want to appear as a common labourer, but as a professional man. When he was a young lawyer, he wore bespoke suits to impress the judges and his clients."

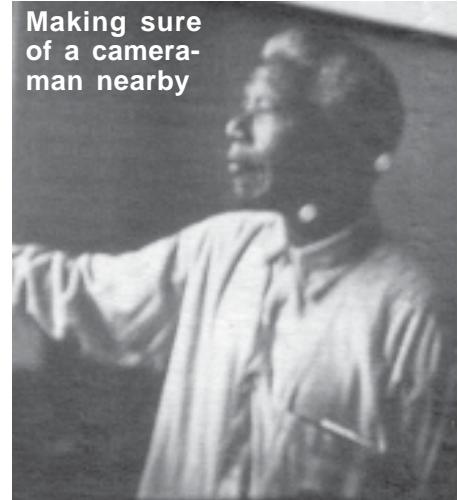

Later in life he abandoned European-style suits and took to wearing custom-made silk shirts. People called them 'Mandela shirts'.

Given his belief in the symbolic importance of appearances, it is not surprising that one of the first battles Mandela had during his imprisonment on Robben Island was over clothing. The regulations said that black prisoners had to wear shorts, while Indian and Coloured prisoners could wear long trousers. "He found it insulting that he had to wear short trousers 'like the garden boy' and fought this fiercely."

Years later, in the '80s, when he was preparing to meet President P.W. Botha for the first time, Mandela felt he should not wear a prison uniform, which 'would put him at a disadvantage'. So the prison authorities had a 3-piece suit made for him, about which he was very particular. He considered this an essential aspect of putting himself on an equal footing with Botha.

"It helped that Mandela was tall, slim and fit. He had beautiful posture. On Robben Island he was always aware of how he carried himself. Some of this was vanity: he was very proud of his slimness, he was careful about what he ate." Mandela admitted: 'It is ironic that the programme in prison, with its minimal diet and physical activity, promotes long life and youthfulness.”

Making sure of a camera-
man nearby

“Appearances constitute reality,” he once said to me. That belief underpinned his genius at what sociologists call ‘impression management’. No detail was ever too superficial to merit his attention. He waited for the precise moment to emerge at an event. Whenever he was exiting an aircraft or entering a room, he was aware of the figure that he cut and of the exact moment that would earn him maximum attention.

Like Abraham Lincoln, who took every opportunity to have his picture taken, Mandela was aware that images have tremendous power to shape how we are perceived. Ever since he was a young man ... he cultivated and edited images of himself.

He posed burning his ‘pass’ [ID document] following the 1960 Sharpeville uprising; he posed bare-chested in and outside the boxing ring; he posed in his African regalia before he was put on trial for treason; he even posed for pictures when he was on Robben Island.

Excerpts from an article, greatly shortened, by RICHARD STENGEL in the London Daily Mail (7 Dec. 2013)

The above article by Richard Stengel brings to the fore a little-known aspect of Mandela. Unwittingly, the journalist has revealed a somewhat unmanly and egoistical trait in the ‘global icon’, suggesting he spent long hours preening in front of the mirror, perfecting his smile, his gestures, his posture, his voice and his facial expressions in the way film-stars do.

No wonder Mandela had no time to attend even a single Cabinet meeting during his presidency. No wonder he gave up after only one term as President, possibly realising that the extravagant promises he had made to the proletariat masses were impossible to realise. In spite of all his speeches about the ‘poor and under-privileged’, he really didn’t seem to care at all for ‘the natives in their blankets’, preferring to bask in the glow of admiration from the international set, always making sure there was a photographer at hand.

Clearly, Nelson Mandela was a well-rehearsed dandy, a self-loving narcissus, with all the affectation and vanity of a strutting fan-tail pigeon.

RECENT REVELATIONS

Dali

IT has now been revealed in Knowing Mandela by John Carlin that the last of Winnie Mandela’s paramours before her husband was released, was Dali Mpofu. In fact, the affair continued even after Nelson Mandela was released. Dali even accompanied Winnie on a trip to the USA; after which he dumped her. The whole stodid story came to light in a letter. The revelations were a humiliation for Nelson, which is the main reason he divorced her. Winnie did not feature in the multi-million rand Will at all.

Dali Mpofu is today the most vocal lawyer standing for the miners (against the police) who were shot at Marikana. He has also now joined Malema’s EFF party.

*

Terror training by Shin Fein

KEPT secret until after his death, Kader Asmal (who was one-time Education Minister in post-1994 SA), boasted in Chapter 6 of his autobiography of having been instrumental in arranging for Shin Fein to give training to MK cadres in Ireland. The plan was facilitated by Michael O’Riordan, general secretary of the Communist Party in Ireland, who contacted Gerry Adams.

Together with terrorist training for MK cadres, they also laid the ground for one of the most destructive operations of the armed struggle.

On 1 June 1980 South Africa was shocked by one of the most audacious acts of terrorism in the struggle against apartheid. On that day the country’s major oil refinery plant in the town of Sasolburg was bombed by explosives. “Black smoke billowed over the Highveld,” the book gloats.

*

Approved the Church Street bomb

IN his book The Long Walk to Freedom, Mandela acknowledges that he approved the planting of the Church Street bomb in 1983 – a terrorist action against the whites of South Africa.

The terrorist deeds in which so many whites were killed by bomb explosions on farms, in churches and in towns, were the deliberate deeds of terrorists, of which Nelson Mandela was one.

*

Nelson the tax dodger

A British mainstream daily asks some awkward questions:

“In his £2.5 million [48-m SA rands] will, Nelson Mandela left nothing to his children, as they had already benefited from handsome payouts during his life, thanks to a complicated series of trusts.*

“And now, disappointing to see that even one of the ‘greatest champions of equality’ did his best to squirrel away his millions from the taxman and from the very people he ‘spent a lifetime fighting for’.”

[London Daily Mail]

*The formation of these trusts would serve a double purpose: Apart from avoiding the tax man’s questions about whence the money had come; it would also serve to avoid inheritance tax.
—Impact.

The Ubuntu Party

A dreadful sameness of narrative colours most of the parties contesting the General Election on May 7: service delivery, jobs, water, sanitation, even transformation in the manner of the Mugabe Option. Except for the mobs cheering their leaders, the people of South Africa are utterly weary of the empty promises. There is one hopeful prospect with bold and practical plans of how to solve at least some of the country’s problems . . .

A NEW political party with a new message is rapidly gaining momentum in South Africa, and has reached millions of people through its placard campaign, its internet exposure, and cell phone messages. It is called the Ubuntu Party. They are exposing the corrupt banking system and proposing a new kind of social structure that will serve to free South Africans.

According to Ubuntu’s founder, Michael Tellinger: “Both the ruling party and DA are completely under the control of the South African Reserve Bank, a private organisation that is being allowed to dictate the financial and economic policy to the people through our government. Our servant, the government, allows the SA Reserve Bank to issue their own private money at any interest rate it chooses, destroying millions of lives in the process, without remorse.

“The country belongs to its people – not to the Government or any other corporation that has laid claim to it.

“As one of its immediate measures to resolve the economic strife of our people, the Ubuntu Party proposes to close down the SA Reserve Bank and replace it with a People’s Bank that creates money for the people, by the people, tax-free and interest-free.”

Press Release

On 18 March 2014 the Ubuntu Party issued a Press Release, announcing its participation in the Parliamentary elections to be held on 7 May 2014.

This included its philosophy and plan of action – “Dealing with the root of all our misery.”

The party saw this as an historic moment because its entry into the political arena was paid for by the people through a global crowd-funding campaign, which clearly indicated the global support for the simple philosophy of UBUNTU Contributionism.

“Every South African feels the dire economic hardship at every level, but most do not know the true cause of our deepening misery. Unless we address the source of the economic war against the people, we will never solve the economic problems.

"We cannot solve the problems by using the tools that created the problem in the first place, which are: 1.The private banks; 2.The South African Reserve Bank; and 3. The Private money they create out of thin air.

"UBUNTU believes that the government is appointed as the servant of the people, by the people – to serve the needs of the people." Based on these simple principles they plan to do the following:

- Restructure the entire banking system to serve rather than enslave the people.
- Create a People's Bank which creates money for the people, by the people, tax-free and interest-free, and stop the financial enslavement of our people by the privately owned SA Reserve Bank. This will free the people of South Africa from debt slavery – the same way that Abraham Lincoln did with his Greenback, and JF Kennedy did with his United States Note in 1963, which replaced the Federal Reserve Note. The principle of a nationally controlled central bank has been successfully applied in many states and countries, the latest being the state-controlled central bank of the state of North Dakota in the USA.

Other aspects of this party's policy include renewable energy; new thinking on alternative cures for disease; freedom from international corporate control over SA's agricultural needs; support for farmers at every level; decentralisation of government; restructure of the judiciary and legal system.

The principles of UBUNTU and the philosophy of Contributionism are detailed in the book "“UBUNTU Contributionism – A Blueprint For Human Prosperity”" by Michael Tellinger.

MICHAEL TELLINGER is the Founder & leader of the UBUNTU Liberation Movement and the UBUNTU Party.

www.ubuntuparty.org.za
Email: contact@ubuntuparty.org.za & michaeljtellinger@gmail.com

Ubuntu has been joined by STEPHEN GOODSON, a former director and shareholder of the SA Reserve Bank, with insider knowledge of how the banking institutions have exploited the people and continue to control our government at every level. An article by Goodson on monetary and banking reform, entitled "Ubuntu Party explains Home Loans at Zero Percent" can be found on the Ubuntu website

FAR & WIDE DEMOGRAPHY & SOVEREIGNTY

RESISTANCE TO BRUSSELS & WASHINGTON

Britain

DOWNING Street clashed with Brussels early in December last after it announced plans to restrict the right of new EU arrivals to claim benefits. Responding to fears of a vast influx when transitional working restrictions on these new EU members lapse, Cameron said new EU migrants would have to wait three months before they could claim job seekers' allowances and would risk losing them after six. Vagrants would be deported and banned from returning within 12 months.

More than 50 Tory rebels want the current controls on migrants to be extended until 2019.

"It has come to something," wrote the Daily Telegraph, "when an unelected Brussels commissar can denounce Britain as 'nasty' for wanting to control its borders. This issue is exercising voters across Europe. It's not the place of the EU Commission, the EU's civil service, to try to 'close down' a discussion that member states may wish to have."

Germany and France have also announced new curbs.

Swiss vote

THE Swiss people voted 50.3% in favour of limiting annual migration from the EU, thus ending the policy of 'free movement' within the bloc that was established in 2002. Thus the Swiss decided that immigration quotas would be re-introduced.

The 'stop mass immigration' motion was introduced by the nationalist Swiss People's Party (SVP). The result will likely vex multinational companies based there, and who frequently utilize foreign labour.

Many in Switzerland – surrounded by the EU but not a member – believe that rising immigration levels are putting pressure on infrastructure, rent prices, social security and unemployment rates. A professor of political science told Reuters, "Many people feel their identity is being challenged."

According to the latest data, 23% of the country's 8 million inhabitants are foreigners – the second largest proportion in Europe, after Luxembourg.

The constitutional amendment could potentially erode Switzerland's relationship with the EU, which views the 'freedom of movement' policy as a fundamental 'right'.

Marine Le Pen, head of France's Front National, gave her support for the outcome: "Switzerland says No to immigration of the masses. Bravo!" She asked if they plan to send in tanks. [rt.com]

Immediately following Switzerland's anti-immigrant vote, the President of the EU Parliament, Martin Schulz, made the following threats..

AFTER Switzerland had voted 'No' to invasion by immigrant hordes, the president of the European Union parliament Martin Schulz began his assault.

Schulz – whose first speech as president made the claim that his "first obligation as President of the European Parliament is to defend the Jewish people and the State of Israel" – has warned the Swiss that all treaties will now be reviewed, implying that it would be punished for rejecting the agenda of Islamification of Europe.

MARTIN SCHULZ,
President of the EU Parliament

Schulz said Switzerland could not expect to pick and choose which agreements it kept with the EU. Schulz continued, that there may now have to be bilateral border controls and that the renegotiation of the free movement contract 'could affect the Swiss population and also their free movement in the EU'.

United States of Europe

AN interview which Russia Today had with the Danish member of the EU Parliament, Morten Messerschmidt, revealed the problems facing member states about their sovereignty . . .

RT: What do you make of this 'United States of Europe' idea?

MM: Most EU Commissioners and officials will never admit that their goal is to form a Federal European Union. The citizens of Europe don't want to have this federal state. So we need to have more referendums to check whether the people of Europe actually want to give up all their sovereignty – fiscal policies, migration policies etc – to an unelected body in Brussels.

RT: There's concern over rising poverty and unemployment in the European bloc. How can this be tackled in a possible 'United States of Europe'?

MM: There are many issues and crises in EU countries at the moment, and many of them have actually been created by the EU itself. For instance, forming the eurozone, trying to merge together very different economies in north and south. This is obviously the main reason why the eurozone is still the only major economy in the world that is still in recession.

When it comes to the free movement not only of workers, but of citizens around the EU, that has obviously led to many problems. For example in Denmark, with beggars and criminals coming transnationally from eastern European countries, there is no possibility of our police forces being able to protect our people. Even after they've been expelled, we can't be sure they won't come back because, according to Brussels regulation, we are prohibited from having border control. So many of these problems have actually come as a result of EU regulation.

RT: The EU has already suspended talks with Switzerland over EU research and education programmes because of the recent anti-immigration vote there. Do you think the Swiss really care about that?

MM: I think the Swiss care about their future. They care about the problems that the open borders and free movement have created much more than they care whether some educational or science programme has been put on ice by Brussels. Actually, I am quite sure that EU officials will soon admit that they have just as much at stake as the Swiss do. For instance, the EU has invested many billions of euros in the CERN particle accelerator in Switzerland. So I think it's a very stupid and juvenile reaction to a rational approach by the majority of the Swiss voters, who are simply saying that the entire 'free movement' and lack of border control has created a catastrophe. The EU should engage in the debate about the problems they have created rather than closing their eyes to reality.

RT: Meanwhile far-right parties and nationalists are gaining strength and they are hailing the Swiss vote. Do you think such sentiments will only intensify?

MM: I fear what will happen here in May at the European parliament elections ... In Greece we now have a new fascist party; we see the Front National in France is likely to get about 20-25 percent of the votes ... It's because many of the problems that arise in our everyday lives – with criminal migrants, with recession of the economy – so it is only rational for many people to reject the over-controlled, over-bureaucratic and undemocratic EU. There is no place for them to go because the old parties remain very loyal to the EU. They would never speak against Brussels, thus the voters are almost obliged to support extreme parties.

Bulgarian fence

BULGARIA is in the process of building a 90-mile fence, ten feet high, and topped with razor wire, along its border with Turkey to keep immigrants out. It has also stepped up military border patrols to stem the flow of refugees fleeing the civil war in Syria.

Defence Minister Naydenov said that since the measures were introduced, 'No illegal immigrants have entered Bulgarian territory.'

Sarin gas in Syria

THE chemical attack which the Obama administration tried to blame the Assad government for, was in all probability a staged event carried out by Saudi-backed terrorists.

Since then, Carla del Ponte, a highly respected former prosecutor of two UN international criminal tribunals, said in an interview with the Italian-Swiss broadcaster RSI: "It was the rebels who used chemical weapons, sarin gas. There is no evidence of government forces having used chemical weapons." [Since corroborated by America's M.I.T.]

This contradicted the view promoted by neo-con war-mongers like John McCain, who insisted that the terrorists did not have that capability. This was the same position that Obama flunkie Secretary of State John Kerry took in an effort to justify an attack on the Syrian government.

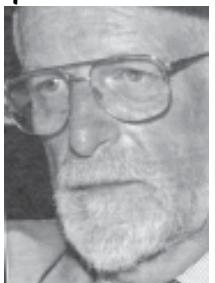

Now, Seymour Hersh, Jewish journalist and Pulitzer prize-winner has come out and pretty much corroborated Del Ponte's position. Hersh wrote a long article in the London Review of Books, in which he asserted that the Obama administration altered intelligence and basically lied so as to use the excuse that Syria had crossed the 'red line' that Obama had drawn the previous year. Hersh is best known for his exposés of the My Lai massacre cover-up and of Abu Ghraib. The whole sarin gas incident can be viewed as just another staged event, another false flag, designed to get America involved deeper in the Middle East conflict.

[White Voice, USA]

Death of weapons inspector

THE belief of new British Home Office Minister Norman Baker that the late government weapons inspector, DR DAVID KELLY, was murdered continues to attract interest, writes the London Daily Mail.

DR DAVID KELLY

In December last Baker notified the parliamentary authorities of an £833.16 royalty cheque – his second in eight months – for his 2007 book 'The Strange Death of David Kelly'. [This bespeaks a big public demand for his book.]

As successive governments have refused to hold a full coroner's inquest into Dr Kelly's death, some believe Lib-Dem Baker is now ideally placed to get to the bottom of the mystery.

It will be remembered that weapons inspector David Kelly had stated definitively that Iraq had no weapons of mass destruction. Months later he died in highly questionable circumstances. Reports on the whole matter, including the ether-zone.com website of August 2003 and The Guardian (as well as The Daily Telegraph, and German and French sources) brought to light the existence of a network of some dark actors, a faction of the British and American intelligence agencies that were about to be exposed as the source of the dis-information put out by the Bush-Blair coalition concerning Iraq's "weapons of mass destruction". Kelly was one of three Western weapons inspectors who saw no signs of WMDs in Iraq, including John Ritter and Hans Blix. [Impact reported on this in detail in its Oct/Nov 2003 issue]

Ecuador leaves defence treaty

ECUADOR has announced its withdrawal from the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, a hemispheric agreement signed in 1947, and ratified by Ecuador in 1950. On February 5 this year, the Ecuador Foreign Ministry said that President Rafael Correa had pulled his country out of the US-led security arrangement on the grounds that it was outdated, AFP reported.

RAFAEL CORREA

President Correa signed the decree on Feb 4, ratifying a decision early in that month by the National Assembly.

The treaty, commonly known as the Rio Treaty, stipulates that an armed attack against any of the member States is to be considered an attack against all of them.

The move is the latest in a shift away from various US-led security arrangements in the region of Ecuador and other Latin American countries.

At the end of an annual meeting of the Organization of American States (OAS) in Bolivia in 2012, the foreign ministers of Bolivia, Venezuela and Nicaragua announced their decision to pull out of the Rio Treaty, saying membership was not beneficial to them. press.ir with UN Under-secretary for Political Affairs FELTMAN, a former senior US Department official; Vice-President JOE BIDEN would be brought into the plan ‘at the right time’.

In her telephone call to Ambassador Pyatt, Nuland used foul language about the EU. [veteransnewsnow.com]

Nuland has had much experience in foreign affairs, as has her husband Robert Kagan and his Foreign Policy Initiative. They represent the worst of America’s dark side. She’s part of a US-instigated insurrection. She wants legitimate Ukrainian governance toppled. She wants pro-Western stooge governance replacing it. She demanded that legitimate Ukrainian President Yanukovich engage “with Europe and the IMF”.

News of her conversation with Ambassador Pyatt [which both Nuland and Pyatt knew was on an unsecured line], broke on Feb. 6th, revealing that Nuland made plans about who would lead the “new Ukraine”. She called opposition leader Arseniy Yatseniuk “Yatz”. (He had served in the Orange Revolution government from 2005.)

When legitimate President Yanukovich offered him and former boxer Klitschko places in his new government, they refused.

Washington’s dirty hands bear full responsibility for street violence. Regime change politics is long-standing US policy. It involves every dirty trick imaginable. Syria is in the eye of the storm. So is Ukraine.

Washington is duplicitous. It can’t be trusted. Its word is not its bond. Its history is treacherous. It systematically ignores international law. It violates treaty obligations repeatedly. It wants all independent governments toppled. It goes all out to remove them.

Nuland spent days in Ukraine in December. She met publicly with opposition leaders, and plotted strategy. She joined their street protests. She handed out cookies.

Imagine if Russian, Chinese, or other foreign officials acted the same way in Washington. Imagine the public rage. Imagine the threatening response.

EU foreign ministers met in Brussels

UKRAINE CRISIS Contd from page 2

* Spread of the orchestrated Kiev protests into non-Russian ethnicities in cities of the Russian Federation.

The Russian strategists conclude that they consider “the situation taking shape in Ukraine to be catastrophic for the future of Russia.”

What is to be done? Here the strategic experts, who have correctly analyzed the situation, fall down. They call for a national media campaign ... This is a pipe dream. The experts are indulging in self-deception. [They should realise that] Washington is the perpetrator of the crisis in Ukraine and intends to take over Ukraine for the precise reasons that the experts list.

What are Russia’s options?

It is a perfect plan for destabilizing Russia and for negating Putin’s successful diplomacy in preventing US military attacks on Syria and Iran. Essentially, if Washington succeeds in Ukraine, Russia would be eliminated as a constraint on US world hegemony. Only China would remain.

There is little doubt that Russia is faced with a major strategic threat. What are Russia’s real options? Certainly, the options do not include any goodwill from Washington.

Possibly, Russia could operate from the American script. If Russia has drones, Russia could use drones like Washington does and use them to assassinate the leaders of the Washington-sponsored protests. Or Russia could send in Special Forces teams to eliminate the agents who are operating against Russia. If the EU continues to support the destabilization of Ukraine, Russia could cut off oil and gas supplies to Washington’s European puppet States.

Alternatively, the Russian Army could occupy western Ukraine while arrangements are made to partition Ukraine, which until recently was part of Russia for 200 years. It is certain that the majority of residents in eastern Ukraine prefer Russia to the EU. It is even possible that the brainwashed elements in the western half might stop foaming at the mouth long enough to get it that being in US-EU hands means being looted as per Latvia and Greece?

Factual analysis

I am giving the least dangerous outcomes of the crisis that Washington and its European puppet States have created, not making recommendations to Russia.

The worst outcome is a dangerous war. If the Russians sit on their hands, the situation will become unbearable for them.

As Ukraine moves toward NATO membership and suppression of the Russian population, the Russian government will have to attack Ukraine and overthrow the foreign regime – or surrender to America. The likely outcome of the audacious strategic threat with which Washington is confronting Russia would be nuclear war.

The ‘neocon’ VICTORIA NULAND sits in her State Department office, happily choosing the members of the next Ukrainian government. The risk is that Washington’s meddling in the internal affairs of Ukraine and Russia could be triggering nuclear war? Are President Obama and Congress aware that there is an Assistant Secretary of State who is provoking Armageddon?

Insouciant Americans are paying no attention, and have no idea that a handful of ‘neoconservative’ ideologues are pushing the world toward destruction.

PAUL CRAIG ROBERTS, writing in veteranstoday.com, reprinted in The First Freedom, USA. Dr Roberts was during the Reagan administration, an under-secretary of Finance and later editor of the Wall Street Journal. This article has been slightly shortened.

US plan for ‘regime change’ in Ukraine

STEPHEN LENDMAN outlines the role of some of those seeking to capture Ukraine for Washington . . .

ASSISTANT Secretary of State for Europe & European Affairs, VICTORIA NULAND, was caught on tape confirming that they are openly spending $5-billion to effect ‘regime change’ in Ukraine.

Her husband, neo-con ROBERT KAGAN, is co-founder of PNAC (Project for the New American Century).

Nuland told US Ambassador to Ukraine PYATT that she had discussed the plan and discussed imposing sanctions on Ukraine. Washington threatened its own. Hours earlier the EU Parliament approved an anti-Ukrainian resolution. It called for imposing sanctions.

Nuland (above) and her husband Kagan

The time-line of how Washington manipulated Ukraine's 2004 Orange Revolution: Yanukovich's earlier government was ousted. In 2010, he was re-elected president. He was targeted again. Orange Revolution 2 continues.

What's ongoing involves weakening and isolating Russia. Washington's dirty game is transparent. Washington wants unchallenged global dominance. It wants world resources plundered. It wants ordinary people made serfs. It wants vassal states beholden to US interests. It wants them trapped in debt bondage. It wants ruthless control replacing democracy. Tactics include bullying, intimidation, sanctions, coups, assassinations and lawless aggression.

Ukraine's future is at stake. Whether any party can revive its democracy remains to be seen. The fate of 46 million Ukrainians hangs in the balance.

STEPHEN LENDMAN on progressive-radionetwork.com. Author of Banker Occupation: Waging Financial War on Humanity. Article shortened for space reasons

LOOKING BACK 10 YEARS

A TECTONIC SHIFT IN HEARTLAND POWER

AN earlier article by WILLIAM ENGDAHL explains much about the Orange Revolution . . .

IN 2004 a pro-Yushchenko movement worked under the slogan PORA ('It's Time') and they brought in people who had helped organize the 'Rose Revolution' in Georgia, with techniques of 'non-violent' struggle, rock bands, and carefully-staged colour theme.

When Yushchenko lost the 2004 election to Viktor Yanukovich, several elements worked in concert to create an aura of fraud around the results, and to mobilize popular support for a new runoff. Using the Pora and other youth groups, in coordination with key Western media such as CNN and BBC, a second election was organized which allowed Yushchenko to squeak back in by a narrow margin victory in Jan 2005, and to declare himself President. The US State Dept spent some $20-million to secure this outcome.

The same US government-backed NGOs that had been in Georgia produced the results in Ukraine: the George Soros Open Society Institute, Freedom House, the National Endowment for Democracy, the National Republican Institute and the National Democratic Institute. These NGOs fed the protest movement of Pora and Znayu.

Yushchenko as president, Washington's man in Kiev, moved immediately to disrupt economic links to Russia, including shutting off Russian natural gas into Western Europe via Ukrainian transit pipelines. This move was used by Washington to try to convince EU countries, especially Germany, that Russia was an 'unreliable partner'.

However, the final result of the 2010 Ukrainian elections was an overwhelming rejection by voters of Yushchenko – the 'hero' of the Orange Revolution – who received barely 5% of the vote. After five years of economic and political chaos, Ukrainians clearly want some kind of stability. Opinion polls in Ukraine showed a majority opposed to joining NATO.

Viktor Yanukovich and his industrial backers want harmonious economic relations with the EU as well as with Russia.

Julia Timoshenko, prime minister under Yushchenko and leader of the Orange Revolution, tried every option to damage Yanukovich, but the Ukrainian Parliament gave her a 'no confidence' ruling, and accused her of various fraud

Massive protests

Western-funded mayhem in Ukraine

US Senator John McCain confers with rebel leaders charges. This put paid to Washington's strategy of total encirclement of Russia... Belarus President Lukashenko successfully resisted a similar Revolution, warding off strong US funding. Belarus is economically tied to Russia, which accounts for half of its trade.

F. WILLIAMENGDAHL(2004)

THE RAPE OF UKRAINE PHASE TWO BEGINS

THE events in Ukraine since November 2013 are so astonishing as almost to defy belief, writes WILLIAM ENGDAHL further, in 2014 . . .

A legitimately-elected (accredited by all international monitors) Ukrainian President VIKTOR YANUKOVICH was driven from office, forced to flee like a criminal after more than three months of violent protest and terrorist killings by so-called opposition.

His 'crime', according to protest leaders, was that he rejected an EU offer of a vaguely-defined associate EU membership that offered little to Ukraine, in favour of a concrete deal with Russia which gave immediate 15-billion euro debt relief and a huge reduction in Russian gas import prices. Washington at that point went into high gear and the result today is catastrophe.

A so-called 'neo-nazi military organization', linked to NATO, played a decisive role in targeted sniper attacks and violence that led to the collapse of the elected government.

But the West is not finished with destroying Ukraine. Now comes the IMF with severe conditionalities as prerequisite to any Western financial help.

European solution proposed

After the famous leaked phone call of US Assistant Secretary of State Victoria Nuland with the US Ambassador in Kiev, during which she discussed the details of who she wanted in a new coalition government in Kiev, and when she rejected the EU solutions [with some foul language], the EU went it alone.

Germany's Foreign Minister, Frank-Walter Steinmeier, proposed that he and his French counterpart fly to Kiev and try to reach a resolution of the violence before it escalated. The talks in Kiev included the EU delegation, Yanukovich, three opposition leaders and a Russian representative. The USA was not invited.

The EU intervention without Washington was extraordinary and reveals the deepening division between the two in recent months ...

After hard talks, all major parties – including the majority of the protesters – agreed to new presidential elections in December, a return to the 2004 Constitution and the release of Julia Timoshenko from prison. The compromise appeared to end the months-long chaos and give a way out for all major players.

The diplomatic compromise lasted less than twelve hours. Then all hell broke loose.

Strange Ukraine ‘Nationalists’

Snipers began shooting into the crowd on February 22 in Maidan (Independence) Square. Panic ensued and riot police retreated in panic. One opposition leader Vitali Klitschko withdrew from the deal, no reason given. Yanukovich fled Kiev.

The question unanswered until now is: Who deployed the snipers? According to veteran US intelligence sources, the snipers came from an ultra-rightwing military organization known as the (UNA-UNSO).

The leader of this organisation, Andriy Shkil, ten years ago became an adviser to Julia Timoshenko. During the US-instigated 2003/2004 ‘Orange Revolution’, the organisation backed pro-NATO candidate Viktor Yushchenko against his pro-Russian opponent, Yanukovich. Its members provided security for the supporters of Yushchenko and Julia Timoshenko on Independence Square in Kiev in 2003/2004 ...

Ever since the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991, the crack para-military UNA-UNSO members have been behind every revolt against Russian influence. The one connecting thread in their violent campaign is always anti-Russia. According to veteran US intelligence sources, the organisation is part of a secret NATO ‘GLADIO’ organisation, and not a Ukraine nationalist group as portrayed in Western media.

According to these sources (officially confirmed), UNA-UNSO were involved in the Lithuanian events in the Winter of 1991, the Soviet coup d'etat in Summer 1991, the war for the Pridnister Republic 1992, the anti-Moscow Abkhazia War 1993, the Chechen War, the US-organised Kosovo Campaign Against the Serbs, and the 8 August 2008 war in Georgia. According to these reports, this paramilitary organisation has been involved in every NATO dirty war in the post-Cold War period, always fighting on behalf of NATO. “These people are the dangerous mercenaries used all over the world to fight NATO’s dirty wars, and to frame Russia because this group pretends to be Russian special forces. Forget about the window-dressing nationalists. These are the men behind the sniper rifles,” this veteran source insists.

If it is true that UNA-UNSO is not ‘Ukrainian’ opposition, but rather a highly secret NATO force using Ukraine as a base, it would suggest that the EU peace compromise with the moderates was likely sabotaged by the one major player excluded from the Kiev 21 February diplomatic talks – Victoria Nuland’s State Department. Both Nuland and [so-called] right-wing Republican US Senator John McCain have had contact with the leader of the Ukrainian opposition Svoboda Party whose leader is “openly anti-semitic and defends the deeds of WWII Ukrainian SS-Galicia Division head”. The party was registered in 1995, initially calling itself the ‘Social National Party of Ukraine’ and using a swastika-style logo. Svoboda is the electoral front for neo-nazi organisations in Ukraine such as UNA-UNSO.

One further indication that Nuland’s hand is shaping the latest Ukraine events is the fact that the new Ukrainian Parliament is expected to nominate Nuland’s choice, Arseny Yatsenyuk, from Timoshenko’s party, to be interim head of the new Cabinet.

IMF plunder of Ukraine Crown Jewels

Whatever the final truth, it is clear that

Arseny Yatsenyuk, Nuland’s choice to head Timoshenko’s party as head of new Cabinet

UKRAINE’s entire gold reserve, all 140 tons of it, was quietly airlifted from Borispol Airport, east of Kiev, to the USA.

Washington has prepared a new economic rape of Ukraine, using its control over the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Now that the ‘opposition’ has driven a duly-elected president into exile and dissolved the national riot police, Washington has demanded that Ukraine submit to onerous IMF conditionalities.

In negotiations last October, the IMF demanded that Ukraine double prices for gas and electricity to industry and homes; that they lift a ban on private sale of Ukraine’s rich agricultural lands; make an overhaul of their economic holdings; devalue the currency; slash state funds for schoolchildren and the elderly to ‘balance the budget’. In return, Ukraine would get a paltry $4-billion.

Before the ouster of the Moscow-leaning Yanukovich government at the end of 2013, Moscow was prepared to buy some $15-billion of Ukraine’s debt and to slash its gas prices by one-third. Now, understandably, Russia is unlikely to give that support. The economic co-operation between the Ukraine and Moscow was something Washington was determined to sabotage at all costs.

The drama is far from over. The stakes involve the very future of Russia, EU-Russian relations, and the global power of Washington, or at least that faction in Washington that sees further wars as the prime instrument of policy.

F. WILLIAM ENGDAHL writing on 21stcenturywire.com (28 Feb. 2014), is a geopolitical analyst and the author of Full Spectrum Dominance: Totalitarian Democracy in the New World Order. The full article containing Footnotes can be found on 21st Century Wire Ukraine Files UKRAINE is definitely the Obama administration’s warped revenge playbook for not being allowed to bomb Syria. (It was in fact saved from it, plus the horrible consequences, by Moscow.) The only things that matter to Washington in Ukraine are: 1) NATO bases. 2) Pipelineistan: US Big Oil controlling still unexplored oil and gas wealth. 3) US agro-business taking over fertile Ukrainian lands.

The EU does not need or want Ukraine, because it would need to save it from bankruptcy with funds it does not have. PEPE ESCOBAR, <http://vineyardsaker.blogspot.co.uk>

Iskra News Site (7 March 2014):THE Crimean Peninsula was given to the Ukrainian Soviet Republic by Ukrainian-born Khrushchev on behalf of the USSR. At the time it was merely a strategic territorial shift within the Soviet Union, but in reality Ukraine was always Russian.

ROLE OF GEORGE SOROS: IN COLOUR REVOLUTIONS

THE following is a summary of an article (Impact, June/July 2004) outlining the role played by currency raider GEORGE SOROS in various other coups over the last two decades

"THE events that resulted in the take-over of power by Saakashvili in Georgia were staged according to the Yugoslavian scenario," Nikolai Kovalyov (former chief of Russia's Federal Security Service) said on the Russian Vesti Nedeli TV news programme.

"The team sent to Georgia first underwent training in camps 70 km from Belgrade. They selected suitable politicians who would help stage a 'velvet revolution' and trained them. Georgian opposition leaders then visited Serbia.

"The camps were opened in 2002, and were funded mainly by Western nations through public Foundations." The US Ambassador to Georgia, Richard Mites, was also the Ambassador to Yugoslavia when President Milosevic was overthrown. He also happened to be Ambassador to Azerbaijan during the 1992 coup there.

"The Serbian-based camps were training men from six other countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). There were representatives from Ukraine, Moldova, Armenia, Azerbaijan and other republics. They were all involved in the Georgian unrest."

Hungarian-born Jewish billionaire, George Soros, backed the anti-Shevardnadze opposition in Georgia, including the TV station, the anti-Shevardnadze newspaper, and a student direct-action group. A successor was already anointed – US-trained lawyer, Mikhail Saakashvili, whose biography (paid for by the US government) included photographs of him with US political elite: George Soros, John McCain, Edward Kennedy, John Ashcroft, and FBI director Louis Freeh. Soros had personally conferred the Open Society Award on Saakashvili. Soros told a news conference that he would "mobilize civil society against Shevardnaze of Georgia, and do what we did in Yugoslavia at the time of Milosevic."

According to Neil Clark of the New Statesman, Soros also toppled governments in Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary, and built up the opposition movement in Belarus. Ostensibly aimed at 'building up a civil society', money distributed to dissidents was designed to weaken the existing political structures and pave the way for eastern Europe's eventual colonisation by global capital.

According to an in-depth article in the Feb. 2004 issue of the New Zealand monthly Western Destiny (no longer published), the Soros hand can also be discerned in South America – Colombia,

GEORGE SOROS

Cuba, Panama.

It is no secret that Soros caused the crash of the South African Rand, also the currencies of Malaysia and Italy.

Soros admitted in the early 1990s that he siphoned money to the Progressive Party (later to be called the DA), to pay for expenses of the SA contingent who held talks with the then still banned ANC at Dakar, Senegal. Soros and Oppenheimer interests from early times financed opposition parties in SA like the left-liberal Progressive Party.

It was not merely greed that motivated Soros, however. His raids were, like a bank robbery, merely a means to an end. Working in tandem with the US administration, Soros's strategy has always been a massive grab for world power.

Soros boasts of establishing a network of foundations that extend across more than 25 countries. "After the collapse of communism, the foundations shifted from a subversive task to a constructive one," he said.

The 2004 Orange Revolution

TWO sets of forces of world importance clashed in the 2004 election. On the one hand, there were the forces of globalism and internationalism which were determined to secure a Yushchenko victory. On the other hand, there were the forces of nationalism and tradition, which sought to curb the globalisers' outreach in eastern Europe, and build a counter-power to the US-dominated New World Order, now extending its tentacles into those areas formerly constituting the Soviet Bloc ...

Mark Almond, writing in the Mail on Sunday (2/1/2004) wrote: "If the Cold War is over, why did the CIA buy the Ukraine election? Groups in the US funnelled $50-million to pro-Yushchenko organisations."

Who paid for the Orange Revolution?

George Soros, with his vast experience in training 'change agents', was, in tandem with US secret services, in the forefront of organising and financing the huge demonstrations in Kiev, supplying funds ... bribes ... reimbursements for the sinister squads of young men in military uniforms with orange armbands 'enforcing order'. Yushchenko promised to lead Ukraine into the European Union and NATO.

The US 'Freedom House' prepared the mass protests. The election campaigners were trained by the American 'National Democratic Institute for International Affairs. A leading personality was Julia Timoschenko. Unabhängige Nachrichten wrote: "The present purpose of the US is purely to break the Ukraine from Russia's sphere of influence and to push it into NATO."

In an article in The New Yorker, Connie Bruck wrote in 1995: "Of all the countries where Soros has placed his philanthropic bets since the fall of the Berlin Wall, Ukraine seems on the verge of producing the greatest payoff."

When Ukraine declared its independence in 1991, an internationally known Ukrainian economist became chairman of the new Soros Foundation. An 'insider' said: "There is no other place where the Soros foundation is so plugged in at the top." Ukraine's deputy minister of finance was on Soros's payroll, as was the deputy governor of the National Bank in Kiev.

With the victory of the pro-US presidential candidate in Ukraine ten years later, Soros was to get his way. Despite the demise of Communism and the USSR, Russia under Putin is still seen as a hindrance to the NWO and must be wrecked as a power.

Western Destiny published a booklet
'George Soros's World Revolution'

A Coup d'État in Disguise, is a long, in-depth article which appeared in the June-July 2006 issue of 'Impact'. It detailed the names of unrest perpetrators, the funding, methodology, and various techniques of revolution, especially the use of the internet. It reveals the dark corridors used by US Trotskyite labour organisers and 'peaceniks'. It must be remembered that Leon Trotsky favoured international socialism, whereas Stalin chose national communism.

The article, by JONATHAN MOWAT, appeared on [www.globalresearch.ca/
MOW 502A.html](http://www.globalresearch.ca/MOW_502A.html) 9 Feb 2005]

RUSSIAN DEMOGRAPHICS

RUSSIA has lost 5 million people since 1991. Putin is not talking about banishing abortion, but about an energetic family policy – housing, schooling, trying to reduce the lost numbers. This policy is starting to bear fruit, since for the last three consecutive years, the demographic equilibrium (number of births against number of deaths) has become slightly more positive.

Lectures Françaises, France

HOW THE IMF WILL LOOT UKRAINE

THE writer of this informative article, Brother Nathanael Kapner, is a Jewish convert to Orthodox Christianity. Like many other well-known dissident Jews, he uses harsh terminology, but the truth shines through . . .

NOW that Victoria Nuland (born Nudelman, married to neocon Kagan), got Yatz to head Kiev's illegitimate regime, the IMF can easily loot Ukraine.

The IMF, as an organized arm of [international] Jewish banking, has two jackboots. Alternately they trample on the people, working in a coordinated cadence.

First the left jackboot reels out the credit [line] and hooks the impoverished and desperate borrower on the credit bait. This is the loan phase. It's a soft kick with honey-coated poison as its bait.

When the debtors, like Ukraine, abandoning help from Christian Putin, can't service the debt, they reel them in with the right jackboot of austerity, cutting pensions and social services, devaluation of currency, higher taxes and utilities, foreclosure and privatization.

This is the looting phase. Inflation and recession don't cause loss. They cause transfer to Jews.

Target of the IMF

Yatz (Arseniy Yatzenyuk) is [a] perfect proxy. He's begging for money. He vows that Kiev will meet all the demands that the Washington-based IMF wants to enslave Ukraine with. That's how the looting begins, with a head of State begging for money who is soon handed a restructuring agreement, pre-drafted for 'voluntary' signature.

"Don't panic!" IMF's gentle window-dressing LaGarde assured Yatz. He has already initiated IMF's "help"— that is "looting", by imposing limits on cash withdrawals and on checking accounts.

With enslavement guaranteed, one asks, "What will the IMF target for looting?" The industries, linked with Russia since Soviet days, located in Russian-leaning Eastern/Southern Ukraine, on which Western Ukraine is dependent for domestic goods and tax revenue, that's what.

Threat to Russia

Russian interests abound in Eastern/Southern Ukraine. Indeed, there is a threat to Russia's national interests in Ukraine. Nuland's USA wants to weaken Russia's regional and global influence via a 3-pronged attack: 1) Bring Ukraine's Eastern industries – economically tied to Russia – into the IMF's clutches. 2) Cancel Russia's lease of its Black Sea Fleet in Crimea's Sevastopol warm-water port, thus cutting off Russia's access to the Mediterranean. 3) Instal a NATO base in its place.

First of all, Eastern Ukraine's industries are inextricably linked to Russia's Military Industrial Complex supporting their military bases.

Second, Yatz's deputy prime minister just called for the cancellation of Russia's lease, known as the Kharkiv Agreement. Putin will not allow this to happen. His warm-water access to Iran, Syria and Egypt depends on it. He's acting fast, catching the US with its pants down as he did in South Ossetia in 2008.

Both houses of Russia's parliament [the Federal Council] unanimously (including even his political enemies) granted Putin the authority to deploy Russian troops into Crimea [if necessary].

The Council is apparently disgusted with Obama's veiled threats further to destabilize Ukraine. Before the vote took place, Russian senators said that Obama

REFERENDUM IN UKRAINE

THE decision of the people of Crimea by means of a referendum to join the Russian Federation has strategic and geopolitical implications.

The union of Crimea with Russia redefines the geopolitical chessboard in the Black Sea Basin.

It constitutes a major setback for US-NATO, whose long-standing objective was to integrate Ukraine into NATO with a view to undermining Russia and extending their military presence in the Black Sea basin.

With the March 18, 2014 Treaty signed between Russia and Crimea, the Russian Federation will extend its control over the Black Sea as well as over the Sea of Azov, the western coastline of which borders on eastern Ukraine and the Donetsk region.

Under the agreement, two 'constituent regions' of Crimea will join the Russian Federation: the 'Republic of Crimea' and the 'City of Sevastopol'. Both will have the status of 'autonomous regions'. The status of Sevastopol as an autonomous entity separate from Crimea is related to the location of Russia's Naval Base in Sevastopol.

Since the break-up of the Soviet Union, Russia retained its naval base in Sevastopol under a bilateral agreement with Ukraine. With the signing of the had threatened Russia and insulted the Russian people. They demanded that Putin recall the Russian ambassador to the USA.

Not only are Putin's political enemies rallying behind him to protect Russia's economic, military and social interests in Crimea, but even Ukraine's Navy Flag Ship is siding with Russia. The ship has hoisted the Flag of St Andrew, the ensign of the Russian Navy. Yatz's anxious request to Turkey to stop the ship en route to Sevastopol, went unheeded. To add insult to injury, the entire Ukraine Navy Command resigned. Kiev's illegitimate 'acting president' made a big mistake in sacking Admiral Yuri Ilyin as Chief of Staff. The Navy struck back.

Apparently, they don't want [alien overlords] ruling and looting their country. And Putin will protect Russia's interests against the designs of the West.

Bravo Vladimir Putin, Protector of Christians world-wide!

BROTHER NATHANAEL KAPNER,
realjewnews.com (March 2, 2014)

ON my last assignment in Crimea, it was clear that most of its people desired reunification with Russia. Equally important, Sevastopol is Russia's second most important naval base.

ericmargolis.com

March 18 Treaty, that agreement is null and void. Sevastopol, including the naval base, becomes an autonomous region within the Russian Federation.

Russia now formally controls a much larger portion of the Black Sea, which includes the entire Crimean peninsula. The Eastern part of Crimea – including the Kerch Straits – are now under Russian control. On the eastern side of the Kerch Straits is Russia's Krasnodar region, and extending southwards are the port cities of Novorossiysk and Sochi. Novorossiysk is also strategic. It is at the cross-roads of major oil and gas pipelines between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea. Historically, the Kerch Straits have played a strategic role. They constitute a gateway to Russia's major waterways. In the coldest months of Winter, the Kerch peninsula becomes an ice bridge linking Crimea to the Krasnodar region.

Prof MICHAEL CHOSUDOVSKY,
Global Research, Canada (18th March 2014)

THE West has few options for inflicting pain on Russia, while Moscow has many cards to play against Ukraine and the West.

JOHN J. MEARSHEIMER,
The New York Times

LOOKING BACK, LOOKING FORWARD

THE following long in-depth article by a writer living in eastern Ukraine, gives us an overview of the complexities in that country, past and present . . .

A PART from a difference of language between Ukraine and Russia there prevails an emotive separation that is even more significant. It has its genesis in Stalin's collectivization orders, a catastrophe diligently enforced by his NKVD lynchpins Genrikh Yagoda, Leonid Reichman and Lazar Moisevich Kaganovich, a gang of human monsters who efficiently managed to murder whole population strata in cold blood: independent farmers, ethnic minorities, members of the bourgeoisie, priests, senior officers, intellectuals, artists, labour movement activists, 'opposition supporters' who were defined completely at random, and countless members of the Communist Party itself. We cannot know the exact number of deaths these men have on their conscience, but it surely exceeds twenty million, with at least six million in the Ukraine alone.

As to the latter, the terrible tragedy is remembered as Holodomor, a time when the people – at least those who could not escape beforehand – were ordered at gunpoint by NKVD thugs to surrender their winter provisions and, in due course, first saw their children die of hunger and then died themselves.

Historical accuracy was hard to come by in those years, and many Ukrainian survivors blamed the crimes on the Soviet government, a sinister and lethal creature impossible to fathom, but generally believed to be Russian. A misconception entirely, because the ethnic Russians themselves suffered even more from their Georgian tyrant and his Jewish henchmen.

... When Boris Yeltzin and his oligarchs broke up the USSR and arbitrarily created present-day Ukraine, a majority of parliamentarians refused to instal Russian as the country's second official language, even though it was spoken by millions of citizens in the large southern and eastern provinces. This discrimination only ended when Viktor Yanukovich won the elections in 2011.

Looking back, the Soros-financed Orange Revolution was the first indication of the strategic struggle that culminated in the havoc recently unleashed on Kiev's Maidan Square.

... [In contrast to the bunch of shifty players on the political stage] I discovered, with surprise and then admiration, that in Vladimir Putin there was a man who offered battle to the gnomes, shrewdly and with iron resolve. The gnomes who were able to loot an entire people of its possessions, instead of consolidating their power bases and multi-billion dollar bank accounts, found themselves on the run or in prison.

Once in power, Putin set out on the tortuous road of healing his country and creating a measure of prosperity for its people. He has done very well so far, but it is still a dangerous game. The gnomes didn't take it kindly, and they immediately regrouped and began to destabilize Russia from within and without. Lavishly funded NGOs were established, like the Pushkin Library whose Jewish-Georgian director received massive resources directly from George Soros.

As time went by, the gnomes' power bases began to deteriorate. One important fact was their incapacity to force a united front. This because their European associates worried more about uninterrupted gas deliveries, almost exclusively supplied by Russia. Particularly, Chancellor Schroeder refused to make Germany a springboard for future NATO interventions.

Europe, itself already in dire straits, balked at accepting yet another aspirant with empty pockets. Thus Julia Timoshenko, the premier with long braids, could not improve the bleak conditions. She depended too much on Russian gas to get the country through the long and icy winters. But she did little to stem the sell-out of her country's assets. Small wonder that she lost out against a Russian-leaning contender in the 2011 election.

... The situation in this most important part of the former Soviet Union, Ukraine, must have caused Putin much headache. First, the Russian Black Sea fleet stationed at Sevastopol on the Crimea, a strategic asset of the first magnitude. And one extremely vulnerable if NATO were to creep up right to its precincts. Then the entire Donetsk Basin, with its important industries – including at Dniproperetrovsk, once a centre of space research and home to Sputnik, the first satellite sent into orbit – but now up for grabs. Or the enormous stretches of fertile land owned by foreigners in league with the gnomes... Vast farmlands owned by foreign companies, who changed their legal trappings every year to avoid paying taxes.

Assault on Libya

... NATO's assault on Libya showed the world what it was, namely a murderous and unprovoked assault that utterly ruined [one of] Africa's wealthiest and socially most advanced countries. When the same gangsters and assassins tried a replay in Syria, Russia was better prepared. It alerted its Mediterranean fleet of warships in Tartus, including a special unit of listeners that keeps track of the sophisticated submarines which Germany donated free-of-charge to the Israeli navy.

The gnomes and their neocon buddies foamed at the mouth. There was suddenly an EU admission for Ukraine on the table again, including the once much coveted NATO membership. The only difference was that at this point in time, everyone realized how Europe was falling apart at the edges all over Europe. Desperate pensioners committed suicide in front of the Greek parliament. Violent protests against the gnome-imposed austerity sanctions were televised in Italy, Portugal and Spain. What exactly Ukraine could gain from such a membership was a mystery for those with cooler heads, except of course the usual interest enslavement on behalf of the IMF and a sell-out of the country's last remaining assets. Some pampered Brussels boffins were dispatched to work out practicalities with President Yanukovich. First he said yes, then no, then yes again, with plenty of 'perhapses' in between. The haggling went on for a while until the boffins got completely exasperated. Then he just said no. And that was that.

The last stage

This brings us to the last stage of the strange and intricate game. The gnomes resorted to what they do best, namely unleashing naked aggression. But first they despatched John McCain to Kiev to deliver the usual nonsense about democracy, and to pave the way for further intrusions. Next came Victoria Nuland of the US State Department, equally offensive, who was overheard – though not by the NSA – in conversation with the US ambassador, using foul language about Europe and suggesting that America go it alone. This was a diplomatic faux-pas so stupid and rude that half the world rolled on the floor in merriment. [This conversation was, probably deliberately, conducted on an unsecured line so as to be leaked – with the intention of giving the impression that the US and EU were not on the same page about Ukraine.]

... Among the genuine Ukrainians who protested the elected President's decision, there appeared the first 'nationalist' thugs and armed foreign mercenaries, all paid for by Nuland's agents. They soon controlled proceedings, and finally unleashed the havoc we have seen.

A lot of people wondered why the army didn't move in and clear Maidan Square when there was still time? Why did Russia seem so strangely disinterested? Putin threatened to intervene with his army, it is true, but only to protect the eastern provinces. And how was it possible that the legally elected Ukrainian president behaved so hopelessly undecided and incompetent? Well, he escaped south, and Kiev got itself a new government, one completely illegitimate, if not downright criminal, as most Ukrainians can see for themselves. The IMF has tendered a first offer, to the usual murderous conditions, but it seems they can't find anybody with the proper authority to sign lasting contracts. Which is probably the reason why the new regime can't pay the gas bill any more.

... There will soon be a referendum in the southern provinces, and I'll bet you one to ten what the outcome will be.

<http://feedproxy.google.com-occidentalobserverTV@gmail.com>
(16 March 2014). This article has been shortened for space reasons

HUGE pro-Russian rallies have been held all along the south-east of Ukraine demanding inclusion in Russia, in Donetsk, Lugansk, even Odessa. Kharkov in the north-east of Ukraine also held a huge demo, demanding a referendum.

In Russia itself, a rally of hundreds of thousands of enthusiastic Russians assembled in Moscow's Red Square in favour of the Crimean incorporation and support for Vladimir Putin.

One report of an opinion poll in Germany showed support for Putin at 80%.

The public and parliamentary 96% 'Yes' for joining Russia in a federal arrangement was ratified by both Crimea and Russia. Elections to be held in the rest of eastern-southern Ukraine are expected to mirror the Crimea vote.

SANCTIONS AGAINST CRIMEA AND RUSSIA

ON March 5, Britain offered more than £1 billion of taxpayers' money to prop up the Ukrainian government, as David Cameron prepared to demand an arms embargo on Russia. The EU agreed to send £9 billion to the new regime in Kiev.

At an emergency EU summit, Cameron called for an immediate arms embargo, non-cooperation with Russia over visas, and moves to prevent Russian energy from gaining equal access to energy firms of the European market. All to punish Putin for sending troops into Crimea.

UN General Assembly vote

AFRICA was divided on the matter of the vote against Russia at the UN General Assembly on March 29th. South Africa, together with 20 other African states, voted against the anti-Russian motion, while 19 (including Nigeria) voted for the motion.

BRICS also supported the Russia-Crimea action join.

PUTIN SPEAKS

"THEY are constantly trying to drive us into a corner because we have an independent position, because we maintain it and because we tell it like it is and don't engage in hypocrisy. But there is a limit to everything.

"Today, it is imperative to end this hysteria, to refute the rhetoric of the Cold War and to accept the obvious fact: Russia is an independent, active participant in international affairs. Like other countries, it has its own national interests that need to be taken into account.

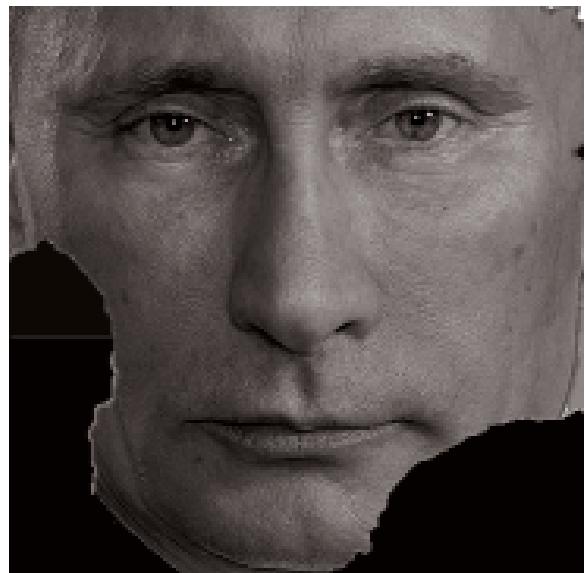

"They act as they please. They use force against sovereign states, building coalitions based on the principle 'If you are not with us, you are against us.' To make this aggression look legitimate, they force the necessary resolutions from international organizations, and if for some reason this does not work, they simply ignore the UN Security Council and the UN overall.

"NATO remains a military alliance, and we are against having a military alliance making itself at home right in our own backyard; in our historic territory. I simply cannot imagine that we would travel to Sevastopol to visit NATO sailors. Of course, most of them are wonderful guys, but it would be better to have them come and visit us, be our guests, rather than the other way round.

"Some Western politicians are already threatening us not just with sanctions, but also the prospect of increasingly serious problems on the domestic front. I would like to know what it is they have in mind exactly: action by a fifth column, this disparate bunch of 'national traitors', or are they hoping to put us in a worsening social and economic situation so as to provoke public discontent? We consider such statements irresponsible and clearly aggressive in tone, and we will respond to them accordingly

"I believe that the Europeans, first and foremost, the Germans, will also understand me. Let me remind you that in the course of political consultations on the unification of East and West Germany... some nations that were then and are now Germany's allies did not support the idea of unification. Our nation, however, unequivocally supported the sincere, unstoppable desire of the Germans for national unity. I am confident that you have not forgotten this, and I expect that the citizens of Germany will also support us.

"We keep hearing from the United States and Western Europe that Kosovo is some special case. What makes it so special in the eyes of our colleagues? It turns out that in fact the conflict in Kosovo resulted in many human casualties. Is this a legal argument? The ruling of the International Court says nothing about this. This is not even double standards; this is amazing, primitive, blunt cynicism. One should not try so crudely to make everything suit their interests, calling the same thing white today and black tomorrow. According to this logic, we have to make sure every conflict leads to human losses.

"The aspiration of the Russians, of historical Russia, is to restore unity."

Energy & Other Russian Priorities From a Russian point of view

WE are already seeing energy playing a key part in the West's New Cold War. The US invasion of Ukraine in November 2013, through its support of an opposition political army, has several layers of energy concerns.

The EU attempt to snare Ukraine into its deflating European economy failed with its "buy now pay later" approach. Emerging countries are usually easy prey to being loaded up with debt and then falling under the control of the banksters.

Ukraine needed "cash now", which the EU could never give, considering all the austerity cuts being pushed down on the member countries. So Putin made his move with the big subsidized energy commitment, as good as cash.

Europe is in a tough spot long term, due to having to import so much of its energy. The high cost puts them in a less competitive position versus those regions sitting on large untapped reserves.

Europe was not thrilled to be dependent on Russia for so much of its gas supplies, but it was certainly better than the oil alternative.

Russia's Priorities

In his annual message to the Federal Assembly for the year 2014, President Putin described the rise of Siberia and the Far East as the national priority for the whole 21st century.

This news did not receive much coverage in the foreign (non-Russian) media. On 8th December, Kiev saw more geo-political buffoonery involving some well-known boxers, singers, gay activists, senior officials from the US State Department and Senator McCain.

Russia and Europe are competing for Ukraine – which is common knowledge. At the moment, the initial phase of the project to develop Siberia and the Far East has been outlined in the following way.

"The tasks that we are faced with," said Vladimir Putin, "are unprecedented in scope, which means that our steps have to be non-standard as well." Taxes, new investment projects, incentives for high-technology production, construction, electric grid and customs clearance: these are factors being planned for. Before 1 July this year, decisions will be made as to where the new economic hub will start.

Industrial development requires a lot of cheap energy. The Far East and Siberia have this sort of energy in large amounts. Consumers like China, Japan, Korea, Vietnam and others in SE Asia are ready to begin co-operation. Cheap energy, exit to the sea communications, and close proximity to the world's producing centres. The new productive capacity of the region will be completed in 2018 as the 'national project of the century'.

KONSTANTIN PENZEV, journal-neo.org

Time Magazine adds its view of the Ukrainian crisis

THE American mainstream publication, Time Magazine (10 March 2014), which generally toes the Washington line, surprisingly gives some interesting information on the Ukraine Revolution, of which the following are short excerpts . . .

* THE protesters in Kiev's Independence Square didn't simply remove a 'corrupt leader'. They explicitly rejected the political values Putin has championed on his side of the border, in favour of a West European democratic model. This allows Putin's critics, at home and abroad, to hold out hope for a similar uprising by political dissidents in Moscow ... On Feb 24th, the day after the triumphant closing ceremony of the Sochi Olympics, several hundred protesters gathered outside a central Moscow courthouse to demonstrate against the sentencing of eight activists. Police arrested more than 400 people. ... Putin's dream [is] of a loose confederation to rival the EU, creating more formal economic ties between regional allies including Russia, Belarus, Armenia and Kazakhstan.

* Obama found Putin to be a strategic rival on international issues like Syria and Iran as well as a personal antagonist who has critiqued Obama's policies, and harboured the former NSA contractor and whistle-blower Edward Snowden.

But to turn the screws on Putin, Obama may have to assume more risk than he is willing to accept. Ukraine comes with a huge price tag thanks to a succession of corrupt or inept governments that have left its economy in need of an estimated $35-billion by the end of this year to avoid bankruptcy.

* Neither Obama nor the EU is willing to dole out any largesse and instead they urge Ukraine to borrow from the IMF. That money would come with stiff terms, like the removal of subsidies, which would spark new protests against Yanukovich's successor. If the Arab Spring taught us anything, it is that the public square is fickle. (After an allegedly fraudulent vote, Yanukovich himself was denied office in 2004 by street protests known as the Orange Revolution, only to be voted back into power little more than five years later.)

* Putin agreed to give Kiev $15-billion in soft loans as well as cheap natural gas, but froze the deal while the post-Yanukovich struggles played out. A pro-West Ukraine would be anathema to most Russians, much as Americans would recoil at a pro-Russian Canada.

* The Crimean Peninsula was a Russian territory until Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev (himself Ukraine-born) attached it to Ukraine in 1954 (in what was described as a 'drunken stupor').

* The Russian navy has a massive base in Sevastopol, on the Black Sea [its only warm-water base, with access to the Mediterranean].

* Kiev is now in a state of barely contained chaos. A former Prime Minister, Julia Timoshenko, a woman who was jailed for fraud and is a deeply divisive figure among Ukrainians, is now free and is said to be making a run for President in elections set for May 25. Another candidate is Vitali Klitschko, former heavyweight boxing champion. ... A multitude of reformers, nationalists, secessionists and corrupt politicians fight for their own interests.

Ukraine is now in a pre-default condition and is sliding into the abyss. Help is offered from the West, but with heavy strings attached. IMF boss Christine Lagarde says the fund will help Ukraine if it actually "wants to undertake a reform of its economy", a vow the country's leaders have made repeatedly but never observed.

* There's also the nettlesome question of whether the EU really wants Ukraine in its orbit – the dream for which protesters in Kiev fought, died and bled. The debt-laden economies of European countries like Greece, Spain, Portugal and Ireland nearly brought down the EU. Some Ukrainians wonder why Russia or the West would even want to take on another basket case. "Ukraine is now a ruined country, a charity case" says a retired airforce general. "Why should Russia take that burden on its shoulders? Same with Europe. It'll be a headache lasting decades."

The industrial east of Ukraine, the engine of the nation's economy, is filled mainly with Russian speakers. The agrarian north-west is composed mainly of Ukrainian speakers, influenced in their culture and politics by Poland and Eastern Europe. The revolutionaries of Independence Square were mostly westerners, and many of the police ranged against them were from the east.

* Those in Sevastopol, worried about NATO intervention, saying: "It's civil war now. We have to defend our own city. The country is lost." There are an estimated 13,000 Russian naval personnel in Sevastopol.

* Russia and Ukraine share a 1426-mile (2,295-km) border. Russia is Ukraine's biggest trading partner and the source of much of its energy. An angry Moscow could bring Ukraine to its knees by choking its gas exports to drive up prices, as it did in 2009. Putin could also permanently cut off financial aid. Or he could simply sit back and watch Ukraine's opposition leaders pull one another apart in public, as they have done so often in the past.

* "The Russians are prepared to go to the mat on this in a way that we just aren't," said a director of the Kennan Institute in Washington. "We do not have the political will or the attention span. Putin takes the long view."

* Photos of Kiev's Independence Square after the riots show the square with its surrounding buildings looking like a burnt-out trash can with individuals standing around in pathetic grouplets. A grandiose memorial structure with gilt-topped pillars now has the appearance of having been used as a urinal.

Time Magazine, USA (10 March)

THE union of Crimea with Russia redefines the geo-political chessboard. It constitutes a major setback for the US-NATO

The violent seizure of power by the junta and backed by the US, seems to have been a miscalculation on their part.

SOME LATE NEWS

VITALI KLITSHKO the heavy-weight boxing champion, supported financially by the Konrad-Adenauer-Foundation in Germany, was one of the leaders-in-waiting of Ukraine. Early last December, he told 350,000 protesters: "Ukrainians do not want to live in a country where corruption rules and there is no justice."

Protesters tore down an 11ft statue of Lenin after putting a noose around the neck and pulling it over with ropes. They beheaded the monument of the Soviet Union founder and hacked at it with axes.

*

The Estonian Foreign Minister has confirmed as authentic his conversation with the EU foreign policy chief Catherine Ashton, during which he said snipers who shot at protesters and police in Kiev were hired by the Maidan leaders. 94 people were killed and 900 injured.

*

The National Press Club was told by Victoria Nuland that the USA had invested $5-billion in a Network to achieve the US's goal in the Ukraine.

*

The so-called 'neo-Nazis' received cash payments via the US Embassy in Kiev. Some of the Opposition Parties received funds for bribes, drugs, weapons or molotov cocktails from oligarchs Kolomosky and Poroshenko.

*

The 140 tons of gold secreted out of the country through the Kiev airport went to JP Morgan, the biggest bank in the world, which has no gold in its vaults and has big problems of liquidity.

*

MOSSAD

Ukrainian media have reported that a former Israeli army officer is playing a leading role in the anti-government protests in the former Soviet republic.

According to reports, the unnamed Israeli commands a group of 20 Ukrainian militants.

Four other Israelis, who had previously served in the army, were recently reported to have taken part in opposition rallies in Ukraine's capital, Kiev.

They were born in Ukraine but migrated to Israel and joined its armed forces before returning to the European country for the demonstrations.

Meanwhile, Ukrainian media said that an Israeli tycoon provides financial support to the opposition in Ukraine, adding that Israel's Mossad intelligence agency is one of the instigators of the unrest in the country.

*

Khushchev's background

NIKITA Khrushchev, was a protégé of Stalin's henchman Lazar Kaganovich. The fact that he was Ukrainian by birth didn't prevent him from participating in the genocidal famine in Ukraine, the Holodomor.

Khrushchev also participated in the purges Stalin set in motion in 1937-1939. In March 1938 Khrushchev reported from Kiev: "3,000 troops have been removed from the district, 1,000 having been arrested. All corps and divisional commanders have been replaced."

A book entitled Stalin: Triumph & Tragedy by Dr Colonel-General Dmitri Volkogonov (Moscow, 1989) details how many hundreds of thousands of military officers and their families, as well as military judges, were arrested and shot. 45% of all the command and political staff of the army and navy perished. Alongside Molotov, Stalin himself signed over 400 lists of victims to be executed. Each list contained hundreds of names.

IS PUTIN ONE OF US?

IS Vladimir Putin a paleo-conservative? In the culture war for mankind's future, is he one of us? asks commentator PAT BUCHANAN . . .

WHILE such a question may be blasphemous in Western circles, consider the content of the Russian president's recent state-of-the-nation address.

As the decisive struggle in the second half of the 20th century was vertical, East vs. West, the 21st century struggle may be horizontal, with conservatives and traditionalists in every country arrayed against the militant secularism of a multicultural and transnational elite.

And though America's elite may be found at the epicentre of anti-conservatism and anti-traditionalism, the American people have never been more alienated or divided culturally, socially and morally.

Putin is seeking to redefine the "Us vs Them" world conflict of the future as one in which conservatives, traditionalists and nationalists of all continents and countries stand up against the cultural and ideological imperialism of what he sees as a decadent West ...

Without naming any country, Putin attacked "attempts to enforce more progressive development models" on other nations, which have led to "decline, barbarity and big blood", a straight shot at the US interventions in Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya and Egypt.

PAT BUCHANAN in
Citizens Informer, USA

"If you press the spring too hard, it will snap back. You must always remember this."

*

"It would be better if Western countries used this money to pay off their national debts and stop conducting an ineffective and costly foreign policy." Protesters, he said, had started active work with the support of the U.S. state department, and warned that Russia would hold to account "those who dance to the tune of a foreign state."

PUTIN

GERMANY 68 YEARS LATER

Sixty-eight years after the end of WWII, German Chancellor Merkel, still in bondage to international interests, said "Our duty is to victims of the Nazis" . . .

IN a speech on Holocaust Memorial Day, she said Germany must never forget the atrocities committed by the Nazis.

"We have an everlasting responsibility for the crimes of National Socialism, for the victims of the Second World War, and above all, for the Holocaust," she said on 27 January.

Looking to the future, Merkel added: "We must clearly say, generation after generation: with civil courage, each individual can help ensure that racism and anti-Semitism have no chance."

She was speaking ahead of the 75th anniversary of Hitler taking power in 1933. [London Daily Mail]

This abject 'kneeling in subjugation' on the part of Angela Merkel – 68 years after the end of WWII – could only come from someone thoroughly indoctrinated in the DDR where she grew up. It could only come from the Chancellor of a still-occupied country.

Can we imagine Putin apologising for the atrocities committed against the Soviet Union's enemies and against its own people 68 years later? Can we imagine Cameron apologising for Britain declaring war on Germany, and for the victims of the holocaust it created by bombing Dresden and other German cities? Can we imagine Obama apologising for Dresden and Eisenhower's deadly concentration camps for German prisoners-of-war?

We [the U.S.] are beginning to resemble the Soviet Union.

Intelligence Report, in The
Nationalist Times, USA

REVISIONISTS – PAST & PRESENT

WESTERN countries undertook a massive repression of revisionism. In some cases, particularly in Europe, legally formulated persecution has sent revisionists to prison, in blatant contradiction of the sermons we have given the rest of the world on “human rights” and “freedom”. In other cases, revisionists have been ruined professionally with the co-operation of government bodies.

Professor ARTHUR BUTZ, www.mehrnews (Feb.1 2006). Born in New York City, Dr Butz is on the faculty of Northwestern University (Evanston, Ill). He is author of the book The Hoax of the Twentieth Century.

Mainstream Press Reaction

Widespread dissatisfaction with the repressive laws in certain European countries is being expressed by the British media, especially concerning David Irving's 3-year sentence by an Austrian court some years ago . . .

“HISTORICAL truth speaks for itself. Those Western countries with laws against Holocaust denial are in a tricky position. They must undo laws that have proved unworkable.” [London Financial Times]

“IRVING’s right to hold his opinions must be defended. Austria’s action in locking him up is offensive to free speech.” The London Times ran the jailing of Irving on its front page, and the headline announced the backlash against the jailing. “THE European Convention on Human Rights should be used to strike down laws banning Holocaust denial.” [Legal philosopher Ronald Dworkin]

GERALD Howarth (Tory MP for Aldershot), and Anthony Beevor (historian) both condemned the imprisonment.

ANOTHER British commentator writes: “THE imprisonment of David Irving is challenging the world that we have experienced since the end of WWII. Those 60 years have seen endless waves of Third World immigrants permitted and encouraged to enter Britain and all other white countries, where Race Laws have been enacted to take away our rights to free speech – all justified by means of endless propaganda about the Holocaust. Irving’s arrest last November in Austria, and now his jailing for three years, has exposed for all to see and beyond all denying, the reality that lies behind all the talk of ‘Democracy’ and ‘Freedom of Speech’. And the British press are being forced to acknowledge this.”

[E.R.Surrey]

“FREE speech is for everybody – even David Irving.”

The Independent

IF and when Ernst Zundel, Germar Rudolph and Dirk Verbecke are sentenced in Germany [which they were soon afterwards], it is anticipated that a similar public reaction will be forthcoming, in spite of the draconian laws in place in that country to prohibit just such comment. Similarly, when Prof Bruno Gollnisch is sentenced in France, which happened shortly afterwards..

Günter Deckert: Views on ‘Manifest obviousness’

IN an article about his recent trial for thinking unapproved thoughts, German Günter Deckert tells readers how he had made a motion in court to discuss the principle of “the Holocaust as a fact manifestly obvious to the court” and stated that the court was duty-bound to produce this “manifest obviousness”. He added that there was no concrete definition of the so-called Holocaust.

What is “manifest obviousness”? He quoted various authorities on the subject.

*“Manifestly obvious facts of history are those proven by historical research in which anybody without such knowledge can inform himself from history books, encyclopedia and similar works . . . The acceptance of manifest obviousness rests on the preliminary condition that the fact is not challenged . . . If however in historiography the truth of an event is contested, it does not become accepted knowledge just because much has been written about it and disseminated.” (Alsberg/Nuesse/Meyer Proof in a Trial, Carl Heymanns Publishing House, Berlin 1983).

*When French historian Jacques Baynac, a proponent of the Holocaust,

GÜNTER DECKERT

HOFFMANN-RIEM HASSEMER
Two courageous Justices of the German Supreme Court, who some years ago called for Free Speech not to be punished.

writes that “for the existence of the Nazi gas chambers only the lack of documents, traces and material proofs can be confirmed” (Le Noveau Quotidien de Lausanne, Switzerland), then this means that there is a need to discuss how and why the so-called Holocaust can remain “manifestly obvious” to the court.

Michel de Bouaerd, professor for History and dean of the faculty for the Arts & Sciences at the University of Caen (Normandy) states: “Documentation concerning the Holocaust is rotten; when describing the system of German concentration camps, it is permeated by a mass of invented stories, constant repetitions, of confusion and generalizations and of falsifications, especially in regard to numbers.” (Ouest-France).

This again proves there is a need to discuss what is so “manifestly obvious” about “the Holocaust”.

*Historian Professor Ernst Nolte seconds the need for discussing what the court finds ‘manifestly obvious’. “The testimony of witnesses rests to a large part on hearsay and mere surmises; the testimonies of the few eyewitnesses are in part contradictory and create doubts regarding their veracity.”

*Director of the Yad Vashem memorial Shmuel Krakowski, in the very same vein, states (Jerusalem Post): “Most of the 20,000 witnesses concerning ‘the Holocaust’ are unbelievable, falsified, can not be verified, or in other ways are not true.”

“To dismiss my motion just because I wanted the court to state by what means ‘the Holocaust’ is ‘manifestly obvious’, Deckert continued, “was arbitrary. It is an essential duty, a task of justice, to deal with underlying facts.

“It is factually and judicially unclear why, in a trial for ‘Holocaust denial’, a motion is supposedly abusive which aims solely at clarifying ‘a fact manifestly obvious to the court’.”

[The First Freedom, USA May 2013] □

1914-2014: CENTENARY OF A CATASTROPHE

THE CHRISTMAS TRUCE

December 25, 1914

THE 20th Century was a disaster for the White Race. A hundred years ago the British Establishment initiated the genocide of our race when it launched the first of the series of world wars, which have now mutated into an undeclared war, organised by the same corrupt Anglo-American Establishment, of unlimited mass-immigration into the white homelands of Britain, Europe, North America and the other white lands overseas.

Should anyone consider that the statement above is unwarranted and too strong a condemnation of the British Establishment, then let them ponder and consider the following: It was the British government in 1914 that declared war on Germany, and not the other way around. Twenty-five years later in 1939, just a short generation later, it was the British government that again declared war on Germany, and not the other way around.

Millions of lives wasted

A million British troops were killed in the First World War, and many more returned home mutilated and seriously wounded. The French, German and Russian losses were even higher. Men spoke of the “lost generation”. Europe’s finest, the most patriotic and most idealistic of Europe’s and Britain’s young men slaughtered.

We have never been given an explanation from the British Establishment for its declaration of war in August 1914; and we have never been given a justification for the staggering loss of life of that four-year ordeal in the mud of Flanders.

And just twenty years after the end of WWI, in September 1939, the British Establishment again declared war against Germany, and thus wilfully initiated WWII.

This war was the most bloody and destructive war in the history of mankind. It is estimated that fifty millions lost their lives, and many more millions lost everything, their loved ones, their homes, their health, everything.

At the end of WWII, Britain was financially bankrupt, its empire destroyed, and the country reduced to the role of a supplicant, begging for loans at the court of the USA, while on the continent, Europe lay devastated, its people starving, its cities bombed into smoking ruins, and all under the heel of foreign armies.

Unrepentant, shameless

That the British Establishment is totally unrepentant for its role in bringing down such disasters onto the peoples of Britain and Europe; that the British Establishment is utterly shameless in its complete denial of responsibility for the damage wrought upon Britain and Europe, is brazenly shown by its intention to celebrate with pomp and circumstance the centenary of the start of the First World War. Prime Minister David Cameron is already claiming that we owe our freedoms in Britain and our Freedom of Speech to the decision to fight WWI.

There is a saying that Truth is the first casualty in any war. Well, you can see that Truth has never really recovered from its mistreatment at the hands of the British Establishment during that first war. Politicians are lying when they claim that the world wars gave us our freedoms and our Freedom of Speech. There is no Freedom of Speech in this country. Anyone who campaigns against the Establishment’s genocidal policy of mass-immigration into this country is liable to be charged under the tyrannical Race Act, and be facing seven years in jail. That is the lack of freedom we suffer from in this country at the hands of the British Establishment.

The Charge Sheet

The two world wars were nothing but a wicked waste of good men’s lives. The wicked and needless weakening of the British armed forces required that we needed America to protect Britain’s world-wide interests against the resurgent power of the Soviet Union. The wicked waste of the national treasure left Britain financially bankrupt and a beggar, dependent on American loans.

The [wanton] destruction of the German army left the Germans defenceless before their foes.

Wickedly and morally indefensible, those two world wars were launched and maintained and justified by means of a constant stream of propaganda lies, manufactured and broadcast by the British Establishment.

To this day, Europe stands defenceless and humiliated before the whole world, as Race Acts in every European country – Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Poland – make it a criminal offence to expose the war-time propaganda lies of the vicious victorious Allies of that suicidal, fratricidal, genocidal war.

I will leave the last word here to John Tyndall who, on the anniversary of Britain’s 1939 declaration of war, wrote in his magazine Spearhead (September 1979) of that catastrophe:

“Some may ask what the point is of bringing all these things up 40 years afterwards when it is the future with which we should be concerned. The plain answer is that our ability to determine the future is inextricably bound up with these events. The powers and the mentality that determined Britain’s catastrophic course of events in September 1939 are still with us today – they rule our affairs today. The factors that currently paralyse every effort at national recovery are in essence the same factors that 40 years ago ensured that we would tread the path to ruin.” RICHARD EDMONDS

in Heritage & Destiny, England

The Christmas Truce On December 25th 1914 these British and German soldiers (from the London Rifle Brigade, and the Saxon 104th and 106th Infantry Regiments) abandoned their trenches on the front line in Flanders. Sadly the European brothers’ war was resumed, with catastrophic consequences during the next four years. [Original photograph]

Readers Forum

AS I said before the event, the death of Nelson Mandela was likely to be similar to that of General Franco in 1975, and for much the same reasons. As you may recall, Spanish doctors fought long and hard to keep the general alive for as long as possible.

Immediately after the Spanish Civil War ended in 1939, Franco set out to build a basilica in El Valle de los Caídos, inside a mountain and carved out of the living rock. His tomb was incorporated ‘for when the time comes’. But when it did come the Spaniards had lost the lid of the sarcophagus, and a considerable amount of time was spent locating it. Hence, in my opinion – and it is just an opinion – the need to keep the Caudillo alive until all was ready and waiting.

As for the ‘Second Christ’, can it be said that the hoi palloï of SA are any better off now than they were before 1994? Our President seems to think so, and from where he was standing at the Opening of Parliament, it probably is. But for the politically un-connected, things were probably better before that date.

– M J (Cape Town)

* * *

I had the privilege of visiting the “Ice

Some Sources used in this issue of Impact:

Australian National Independent, PO Box 4010, Homebush South NSA, Australia 2140

Citizens Informer, PO Box 221683, St Louis, MO 63122, USA. www.CofCC.org
Courrier du Continent, Case postale 5694, 1002 Lausanne, Switzerland
Die Afrikaner, PO Box 1888, Pretoria 0001. www.hnp.org.za

Heritage & Destiny, 40 Birkett Dr, Preston, Lancs PR2 6HE, UK. www.efp.org.uk
Mankind Quarterly, 1133 13th St, NW #C2, Washington DC 20005, USA

www.Mankindquarterly.org
Nationalist Times, P.O. Box 218, Wildwood PA 15091, U.S.A. www.anu.org
Power Newsletter, 3152 Parkway, 13-109 Pigeon Forge, TN 37863, USA.

www.zundelsite.org
The First Freedom, PO Box 385, Silverhill, Ala. 36576, USA. www.firstfreedom.net
Unabhängige Nachrichten, Postfach 400215, D-44736 Bochum, Germany

Age Art” exhibition last year. The people who created the Ice Age Art are known as Cro-Magnons. They were the people who first came to public notice when the utterly incredible Cave Paintings of Lascaux and other caves [in France] were discovered. These people have been dated back 40,000 years.

They were hunter-gatherers and yet their lives were obviously far from the usual picture of cave-men wrapped in skins, eking out a precarious existence by killing small animals for food, and dragging their women around by the hair! They had leisure time during which they produced all sorts of exquisite objects. Each hunter was able to identify his own spear. This was important because when hunting in groups – which they did, particularly when large and dangerous animals were involved – the hunter whose spear was deemed to have made the fatal thrust had the choice of the animal parts, the rest being shared. Presumably each hunter chose his own unique design, and some of the spears were beautifully decorated.

Far from being seen as inferior creatures, women were treated with respect because only they could give birth and thus ensure continuation of their kind. They were depicted as tall and fair-haired.

Archaeologists and historians have found no trace of any equivalent cultural artefacts with the remains of Neanderthals, who can be dated to have existed alongside the early Cro-Magnons.

– J A (England)

Some bouquets for Impact

YOUR reportage on Martin Luther King and Mandela were sober and factual, as opposed to the overwrought mainstream media coverage in the USA. Who needs history when the public can rely upon eulogies? If Mandela made a Utopia out of SA, why is Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe lagging behind? – E T (USA)

* * *

YOU did an outstanding job exposing the Mandela myth in the Feb-March Impact. Would it not be wonderful if every white household in this country could have a copy of it!

The pro-Mandela propaganda seems to go on and on, with even a remembrance service in Westminster Abbey. The Queen seems to be fed up, though.

– W V (Oudtshoorn)

* * *

CONGRATULATIONS! Bravo! Baie geluk! What else can I say? Your last edition of Impact is the best ever. This is what we needed. You have published so much important evidence of the true St Mandela. It is sickening still to see and hear all the ‘tributes’ to our ‘peace-loving’ deceased holy man. Everything you say is accurate. It’s about time we heard the truth. – H J (Bloemfontein)

* * *

YESTERDAY I read the latest Impact from beginning to end. It is a particularly interesting and informative issue. The debunking of the global icon is very well done.

What also interested me greatly was the fact that there were so many Jews in Mandela’s life. What I can’t understand is the fact that the ANC now seems so opposed to the Jews. How do you account for it? – F C (Cape)

Impact’s comment: Possibly, any ANC hostility towards Jews must be because of the treatment meted out by Israel to the Palestinian Arabs, underlined by dissident Jews like Ronnie Kasrils.

* * *

THE whole world is in meltdown. One wonders what the future holds for the white race. (Trouble, trouble, boil and bubble?)

The letters in your Readers Forum are spot-on. I love every article in your publication. A great pity that still too many out there are happy to be brainwashed.

– H J (Scotland)

* * *

IMPACT contains a most valuable, compact collection of facts of historical, social, and cultural importance in each of its issues. But, because I am a South African who has lived through a long period of this country’s history, and regarded with anxiety and frustration all that happened during that time, the last Impact was of special importance. It clarified to a large extent the causes of the changes that occurred to bring the country to the sorry state in which we find ourselves today.

This last Impact brought into perspective the role played by the puppet figure of Mandela. And yet now, today, there is a special memorial service for him held in Westminster Abbey!

Reading about the people, the countries, the press, the media which all took part in the manipulation necessary to bring about the takeover of SA – opening the gates for criminality, corruption and mindless chaos – fills me with anger. We have become just like the rest of cesspool Africa.

But to bring all this knowledge of the Mandela myth together in one issue was a tour de force in journalism and painstaking research. Again, my most enthusiastic congratulations and a standing ovation for you. – Bloemfonteiner

ANNOUNCING the completion of the first phase of its Soaring Eagles enterprise, Ingrid and her husband, revisionist Ernst Zündel, have produced a mission statement explaining some of their plans and what has already been achieved . . .

SOARING EAGLES Studios and Gallery is a small but ambitious Communications and Entertainment company. We see ourselves as an artistic outreach mission, focusing on strengthening ethnic awareness and pride for European-descended people all over the world.

Our primary goal is to create, produce, and market quality motion pictures and other forms of artistic expression which inform, entertain, and inspire. Initial discussions are in progress with an independent motion picture company to co-produce a biographical feature movie, tentatively titled "Off Your Knees, Germany!" depicting the worldwide struggle for Freedom of Speech. The screenplay already exists.

As time and resources permit, we will sponsor theme-relevant speakers, weekend seminars, and include print publications and exhibits of exceptional European-derived art. Through these events, activities and productions, we will address the ethnic concerns of a marginalized people and satisfy our craving for honour and beauty.

Our appeal applies to all European-descended people, Germans, Scandinavians, Brits, Spaniards, Italians, Ukrainians, Russians, the Balts – millions and millions of them!

We need helpers, fund-raisers, to kick-start a global community spirit to announce that our future is a serious business for us. We must declare a moratorium on complaining. We are robust, tough, and dynamic. And we say that "Enough is enough!"

On a much-travelled Tennessee highway, the Zündels have founded a very attractive gallery, a research library and a meeting room. Details of the books and videos available can be found on

www.soaringeaglesgallery.com

OIKO-FOBIE

By THIERRY BAUDET

THE unusual name of this book refers to 'the fear of an own folk identity' driven by politics and media, writes the Netherlands academic Thierry Baudet. Oiko (ego) Fobie (phobia) in essence means fear of one's own identity.

The book provides the reader with an insight into a condition that Westerners suffer from – a form of self-loathing – in the process of which they are encouraged to embrace rootlessness or deracination, and alienation.

Baudet believes that modern art is a character trait of culture distortion.

In addition, multiculturalism, open borders and the EU are all symptomatic of a sick society.

Most white South Africans are bilingual, and the Dutch language being similar to Afrikaans would not present an obstacle to reading Oiko-fobie. This is especially so because the same elite – particularly the Leftist media in SA, supported by leftist academics – have for decades promulgated this same hatred of 'own identity'.

Thierry Baudet has a doctorate in Law, and lectures in the same faculty where he graduated.

Available from Amazon.co.uk

Thoughts to Ponder . . .

YOU wished for multiculturalism? Now you have to love its consequences.

JULIEN JAUFFRET in Minute, Paris

EVEN though it was at Moscow's Patrice Lumumba University in the days of the Soviet Union that Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK) was founded by Nelson Mandela, his greatest support came from certain interests in England. The commemoration service in Westminster Abbey tells it all.

THE most effective way to destroy a people is to deny and obliterate their own understanding of history.

GEORGE ORWELL

HUMAN differences are so profound, it is neither possible nor desirable to eliminate all inequalities, hierarchies and distinctions.

JAMES BURNHAM

The Pacifist

PALE Ebenezer thought it wrong to fight,
But Roaring Bull (who killed him) thought it right. HILAIRE BELLOC

YOU can't wait around for someone else to act.

EDWARD SNOWDEN

ONCE relegated to only the bleakest science fiction movies depicting a totalitarian future, drones are now an integral part of the 'New America'.

Nationalist Times, USA

COURAGE is resistance to fear, mastery of fear – not absence of fear.

MARK TWAIN

TO a hammer, every problem looks like a nail.

THE FED is leading the US down the path of the Weimar Republic.

TURTLE HOLLOW

IMPACT

Box 2055, Noorsekloof, Jeffreys Bay 6331, South Africa

Annual subscription - 6 issues p/a

SA (Normal)	R108
(Pensioners)	R102
SWA/Namibia surface:	R108 air: R115
USA	sea: $30 air : $45
Canada	sea: $35 air: $50
U.K.	sea: £15 air : £25
Europe	sea: €30 air: €45

Overseas subscribers: Please add $11/E7/€9 for conversion of foreign cheques